It has been asserted by some that the common people of Italy, Spain, and Portugal, speak the language of their respective countries mostly in accordance with what is written among them, while the same class in England, and we may add in our own country to a certain extent, are generally deficient with regard to the received principles of correct speech in the quality and use of words. Without saying how far the assertion holds good, we will only remark that the philologist and the attentive observer who understands the language of his forefathers, will at once perceive that what is supposed to be incorrect, is in the majority of cases the genuine Anglo-Saxon, which expresses itself through its natural channel. Above the class to which we have alluded, a superstructure has been raised in the various elements which have entered into the composition of our present English since the days of Gower and Chaucer, of Surrey and Spenser, and which took their rise, indeed, considerably anterior to that period, if not with the Norman Conquest. The languages of Italy, Spain, and Portugal, on the contrary, have remained comparatively stationary since their first formation, and, from their very nature, they must be spoken by all conditions of society with but little difference.

PREFACE.

If we are partly led to the study of the Latin and Greek languages from the light which they throw upon the structure of our own, the Anglo-Saxon, for the same reason, has claims upon us almost equally great, forming, as it does, the broad basis upon which the others rest. So true is this, that it can be safely affirmed that no one has a thorough knowledge of English, who is unacquainted with an element of so much importance.

It is from a desire of making American youth who glory in their Anglo-Saxon descent acquainted with the language of their ancestors, that the author has been induced to issue the following pages. He has long perceived the want of something of the kind from the press in this country, while the subject has of late years received so much attention in Great Britain, and trusts that he has at last met it in a certain measure. How far he has succeeded in his attempt, he leaves it to the literary portion of the community to judge.

The principal authorities consulted in preparing this work, have been the Angelsaksisk Sprogloere of the late distinguished philologist, Prof. Rask, of Copenhagen, the learned Deutsche Grammatik of Prof. Grimm, and the Compendious Grammar of the Primitive English or Anglo-Saxon Language and larger Dictionary of that eminent Saxon scholar, the Rev. J. Bosworth, LL.D., PH.D., etc., etc., etc. In the general order and arrangement of his matter the Author has differed both from Prof. Rask and Dr. Bosworth, and likewise from them and the rest who have written upon the subject in many of his views of the language. In some few instances he has used the expressions of others, either through inadvertence, or where he had found the same employed by more than one to such an extent as to become common property.

It was intended at first to introduce the Ablative, but upon mature reflection deemed unnecessary, as, however general and express that case may have been in earlier times, with the exception of a few peculiar forms, it evidently does not belong to the language as we now have it, distinct from the Dative. It would seem to have been gradually laid aside, while the Dative finally, in almost every instance, was used in its stead.

The accent has been employed in every case in which analogy would justify it. How much the proper pronunciation of words depends upon its adoption, will be easily seen.

Not only has the monkish character been rejected and the Roman substituted in its place, but the P, p, has been represented by Th, th, and the D, ð, by Th, th. While nothing is lost by this further change, typographical uniformity has been gained.

St. James, Santee, S. C., June, 1848.

INTRODUCTION.

ON THE STUDY OF THE ANGLO-SAXON LANGUAGE.

LANGUAGE may properly be defined to be "the expression of ideas either by sounds or signs." To the former we give the more specific name of spoken, and to the latter that of written language. It is the capacity of expressing ideas through language which confessedly raises man, "the noblest of God's creatures," above the other works of his hands, and which places him in the scale of being "but a little lower than the angels." It is also a line of demarkation that is continually broadening, for just in proportion as civilization advances and the arts and sciences progress and develop themselves, does language become more useful in itself and more admirable in its structure, until the nicest shades of meaning, and the finest and most hair-splitting distinctions in thought, may be set forth and conveyed to other minds with a precision truly wonderful. So far, indeed, is this true, that whether existing as cause or effect, the curious inquirer may trace the wavy line of civilization from the wild hordes of Tartary to the polished inhabitants of Berlin, by exactly following the progress and more elevated structure of the languages of the divers countries through which he may pass, from the disjointed jargon of Beloochistan to the learned and philosophic language of Germany. It will be further found on inquiry and reflection, that the desire of becoming acquainted with the various signs and sounds used by the inhabitants, both ancient and modern, of different portions of the earth for the expression of the same ideas, has also kept pace or rather increased with social and intellectual improvement among nations. The North American Indian, proud of his native forest and of his naked form, feels his unwritten gibberish adequate to all his wants, and never spends a thought on the mode in which neighboring nations differ from his own tribe in their forms of speech. The Turkish merchant or the Mohammedan dervis, one half animated under the influence of his opium and his pipe, is satisfied if he can give vent to the few words understood by his customer, or misapprehended by his votary, his dull intellect having never been taught to stray beyond the confines of his coffee or his sherbet. But pass within the borders of enlightened France, or cross the channel which separates the continent from the research of England, and you may behold men who, not content with studying the various languages that are now spoken throughout the different kingdoms of Europe ; who, not satisfied with analysing the Latinity of Lucan, the Greek of Aristophanes, or the Hebrew of Maimonides, are searching for the hidden mysteries contained in the hieroglyphics of Egypt, and in the still more curious and recondite inscriptions of Central America, or are loading their brains with the numerous dialects of the vast territory of Hindostan. One may there admire the labors of a Champollion or a Jomard, of a Clarke or a Porson, of a Sir William Jones or a Warren Hastings.

INTRODUCTION.

We have intimated that this desire has increased with the rise and progress of the arts and sciences, and the general diffusion of letters. Is not this true? Compare the condition of the European world from the fifth to the fifteenth century ; from the time when the swarms of barbarians from the northern hive overspread Italy, till the period of the invention of printing, of the compass, and of gunpowder. Then all learning, and all desire for learning, were confined to the cloister—to a knowledge of writing, and of the Latin and Greek languages for performance of religious rituals, and the understanding of the New Testament. Then every tribe and every feudal territory looked upon its neighbors as barbarians whose dialects, or whose customs and laws, were unworthy of being known. Now the craving for foreign languages is without limit : every school-miss must smatter some French, or be able to repeat in the original some of Goethe's lyrics ; and no man thinks himself educated, even in this steam-generating age and country, without a tolerable acquaintance with the classics, and some knowledge of more than one modern language besides his vernacular. And should not this increased and ever increasing desire of becoming acquainted with the modes of thought and expression of those nations which are now numbered with the dead and belong only to history, as well as of those which are still in existence, but which are separated from us by territorial limits and by difference of language, be, within certain bounds, encouraged ? We answer that it should, and we would endeavor, as far as we are capable, to give it a right direction. That there are defects in our present system of education, no one can doubt. Too much, by far too much time is spent by our youth in lumbering their heads with the languages of ancient Greece and Rome ; in scanning hexameters and writing anapests. Years of exertion when the mind is fresh and the memory strong, are to a great extent wasted in the acquirement of information which can, comparatively speaking, be but of little practical advantage in future life. Who will question for a moment that all the boasted discipline of mind so fondly attributed to a study of the classics, and all the elegance of taste supposed to be derived from a familiarity with Cicero and Virgil, may be equally insured from a thorough knowledge of the language and writings of Mendelsohn, of Schiller, and of Goethe, at the same time that we are mastering a living tongue used by millions of the most enlightened of men, and of incalculable benefit in our intercourse with the world? Change of case by change of termination, declension of articles, prepositions governing genitives, datives, and accusatives, and inversion of sentences, may all be found, ready to tempt the ardor and puzzle the ingenuity of the student. Let us be understood. We live in an age of energy and of improvement, and in a country peculiarly distinguished for its rapid advancement and for the restless and unwearied ambition of its inhabitants. We are men at a time of life when tutelage has not ceased in other countries. We leave our homes and our friends, mere youths, in search of a new settlement and a sudden fortune, and do not return to the place of our birth until we can write ourselves "the member" from some western district, or have been favored by the blind goddess. All here have equal political rights; the highest honors and the noblest stations are open equally for the rich and the poor, for the high and the low; and the consequence is, a corresponding population—a population anxious to acquire only those elements of information which can be brought into immediate use. And hence there never has been a land that has given rise to so much improvement in the arts—without science; to so many orators—without learning; to so much legislation—without statesmen. We make a professional man as we make a journey—by steam; we select a congressman as we select a wife—by accident, or under the influence of feeling. In such a country, we confess, we do not expect to find men devoting their whole lives to the thorough and masterly comprehension of dead languages, in this way secure of a place among the scholars and the venerated men of learning among their own people. We do not, in the present state of things, expect to find an American Porson or Schrevelius. Such men are too plodding, such learning is too solid for so energetic and so electro-magnetic a country. We would endeavor, then, but without taking away the means of acquisition from those desirous of emulating European scholarship and erudition; we would endeavor, I say, to make education more practical and better adapted to the age and country in which we live. We would have more time bestowed in our colleges upon the modern languages at the expense of Latin, and especially of Greek; and we would also extend the ordinary programmes of our schools so as to embrace the Anglo-Saxon, the full sister of the German and English, the daughter of the same common parent, the Teutonic, for the reasons which we are about to assign.

INTRODUCTION.

It will scarcely be denied that the first object of all who have any pretensions to the outlines of an education, should be a thorough comprehension of their mother tongue—its power—its character—its elements. Nothing has ever appeared to us more ridiculous than the abundant and pedantic Latin and Greek quotations of a man ignorant of his vernacular—learned in Horace and Juvenal, but shamefully negligent of Murray and Webster—at home in all the wars of Cæsar, but to whom the splendid productions of our mighty Shakspeare are a sealed book. Such a man reminds us of a mathematician who can calculate the recurrence of an eclipse with accuracy, but who cannot work out the simplest question in discount; of a chemist who will furnish us with the most correct and minute analysis of the waters of a mineral spring, but who blunders in decomposing common chalk. We hope the day is not far distant when such men may be rarely met with, and we think it will depend in some degree on the introduction of the study of the Anglo-Saxon into our colleges.

The English, like all other languages of the present day, is a derivative language, and its great bulk comes to us from the Anglo-Saxon, the Latin, the Greek, and the French. Of these four by far the greater number of words, and those of the most important, necessary, and forcible sorts, are derived immediately from the Anglo-Saxon.* From the information that we can collect on the subject, it may be set down as very nearly certain that about five-eighths of our language is Anglo-Saxon, three-sixteenths Latin, one-eighth Greek, and the remainder a compound of French, Spanish, and other tongues. It will thus be seen how important a part, even numerically considered, the Anglo-Saxon plays in the formation of the English. Sharon Turner, whose history of that ancient people is replete with learning, with industrious research and with correct views, has, in his Chapter on the Language of the Anglo-Saxons, marked the number of words immediately derived from that language in several passages selected from the Bible and from some of our most classic writers, such as Shakspeare, Milton, Thomson, Addison, Locke, Pope, Swift, Hume, Gibbon, and Johnson. On counting the number of Anglo-Saxon words, and comparing it with the number derived from other sources, it will be found * Under the head of William the Conqueror, Hume in his celebrated history has the following sentence: "From the attention of William, and from the extensive foreign dominions long annexed to the crown of England, proceeded that mixture of French which is at present to be found in the English tongue, and which composes the greatest and best part of our language." Our remarks will be found to be in collision with those of the great historian, and yet we think there can be little doubt that in this instance Hume has fallen into error.

INTRODUCTION.

that in no selection is more than one-third not Saxon, and in some less than one-tenth, the largest proportion of words of Saxon origin being contained in those authors who are confessedly the most forcible in their expressions, and the most admired as models of strength ; the translation of the Bible by the Bishops, commonly known as King James's Bible, standing at the head of the list for the number of Saxon words, as it unquestionably does for terseness and force of language. We should, therefore, be doing injustice to the services rendered us by the good old Saxons, were we to look merely to the number of words transplanted from this source into the vernacular. For although of the forty thousand forms, exclusive of inflections and participles, now comprising the English language, more than twenty thousand, which exceeds the number of words contained in Bosworth's Anglo-Saxon Lexicon, are incorporated into it from the Anglo-Saxon, yet we believe that we are far more indebted to our Saxon progenitors because of the peculiar kinds of words we have obtained from them, as well as from the influence which they have exerted on the grammatical construction and the idiomatic expressions of our language, than on account of the actual proportion of them. Sir Walter Scott, than whom no man knew better the power of our most forcible language, or has probed more deeply the sources of its strength and flexibility, has borne testimony to the value and energy of our Anglo-Saxon derivatives in that masterpiece—his Ivanhoe. In a conversation between Gurth, the swineherd, and Wamba, the jester, in which Gurth is calling upon Wamba to “ up and help him, an' he be a man,” to get together the wandering swine, Wamba says : “ Gurth, I advise thee to call off Fango, and leave the herd to their destiny, which, whether they meet with bands of travelling soldiers, or of outlaws, or of wandering pilgrims, can be little else than to be converted into Normans before morning to thy no small ease and comfort."

"The swine turned Norman to my comfort!" quoth Gurth; "expound that to me, Wamba, for my brain is too dull, and my mind too vexed to read riddles."

"Why, how call you these grunting brutes, running about on their four legs?" demanded Wamba.

"Swine, fool, swine," said the herd, "every fool knows that."

"And swine is good Saxon," said the jester, "and how call you the sow when she is flayed and drawn and quartered, and hung up by the heels like a traitor."

"Pork," answered the swine-herd.

"I am very glad every fool knows that, too," said Wamba, "and pork, I think, is good Norman French, and so when the brute lives, and is in the charge of a Saxon slave, she goes by her Saxon name; but becomes a Norman, and is called pork, when she is carried to the castle hall to feast among the nobles; what dost thou think of this, friend Gurth, ha?"

"It is but too true doctrine, friend Wamba, however it got into thy fool's pate."

"Nay, I can tell you more," said Wamba in the same tone. "There is old alderman Ox continues to hold his Saxon epithet, while he is under the charge of serfs and bondmen, such as thou; but becomes Beef, a fiery French gallant, when he arrives before the worshipful jaws that are destined to consume him. Mynheer Calf, too, becomes Monsieur de Veau in the like manner; he is Saxon when he requires tendance, and takes a Norman name when he becomes matter of enjoyment."*

* These remarks might be extended to other words of the same class—the Saxon sheep was converted into the Norman mutton, for the use of the feudal lords, and a young hen tasted more palatable

INTRODUCTION.

And again he adds, in speaking of the introduction of the language of William the Conqueror, "In short, French was the language of honor, of chivalry, and even of justice, while the far more manly and expressive Anglo-Saxon was abandoned to the use of rustics and hinds, who knew no other."

An elegant writer in the Edinburgh Review, of 1839, sums up thoroughly and beautifully, and more forcibly than we could, the items of the debt of gratitude we owe to the Anglo-Saxon (as by far the most important and influential element of our language), in the following words, which we are glad to adopt.

"In the first place," says the reviewer, "English Grammar is almost exclusively occupied with what is of Anglo-Saxon origin. Our chief peculiarities of structure and of idiom, are essentially Anglo-Saxon; while almost all the classes of words, which it is the office of Grammar to investigate, are derived from that language. And though these peculiarities of structure may occupy little space, and these words be very few compared with those to be found in Johnson's Dictionary, they enter most vitally into the constitution of the language, and bear a most important part in shaping and determining its character. Thus, what few inflections we have, are all Anglo-Saxon. The English genitive, the general modes of forming the plural of nouns, and the terminations by which we express the comparative and superlative of adjectives, er and est; the inflections of the pronouns; of the second and third persons and seemed better adapted to Norman stomachs, served up as a French pullet, &c., &c. It was the perusal of the above quotation from the admirable production of the Wizard of the North, many years since, that first turned the writer's attention to the study of the Anglo-Saxon; nor is this the only favor that he has to acknowledge as conferred on him, by a careful attention to the writings of this great Novelist, Poet, Historian, and Antiquary.

INTRODUCTION.

present and imperfect of the verbs ; of the preterites and participles of the verbs, whether regular or irregular, and the most frequent termination of our adverbs (ly) are all Anglo-Saxon. The nouns, too, derived from Latin and Greek, receive the Anglo-Saxon terminations of the genitive and the plural, while the preterites and participle of verbs derived from the same sources, take the Anglo-Saxon inflections. As to the parts of speech, those which occur most frequently, and are individually of most importance, are almost wholly Saxon. Such are our articles and definitives generally : as a, an, the, this, that, then, those, many, few, some, one, none ; the adjectives, whose comparatives and superlatives are irregularly formed, and which (for reasons on which it would be irrelevant to speculate here) are in every language among the most ancient, comprehensive in meaning, and extensively used : the separate words more and most, by which we as often express the forms of comparison as by distinct terminations ; all our pronouns, personal, possessive, relative, and interrogative ; nearly every one of our so-called irregular verbs, including all the auxiliaries, have, be, shall, will, may, can, must, by which we express the force of the principal varieties of mood and tense ; all the adverbs most frequently employed, and the prepositions and conjunctions almost without exception.

“Secondly. The names of the greater part of the objects of sense, in other words, the terms which occur most frequently in discourse, or which recall the most vivid conceptions, are Anglo-Saxon. Thus, for example, the names of the most striking objects in visible nature, of the chief agencies at work there, and of the changes which pass over it, are Anglo-Saxon. This language has given names to the heavenly bodies, sun, moon, stars ; to three out of the four elements, earth, fire, water ; three out of the four seasons, spring, summer, winter ; and, indeed, to all the natural divisions of time, except one, as day, night, morning, evening, twilight, noon, midday, midnight, sunrise, sunset ; some of which are amongst the most poetical terms we have. To the same language we are indebted for the names of light, heat, cold, frost, rain, snow, hail, sleep, thunder, lightning ; as well as of almost all those objects which form the component parts of the beautiful in external scenery, as sea and land, hill and dale, wood and stream, &c. The same may be said of all those productions of the animal and vegetable kingdoms which form the most frequent subjects of observation or discourse, or which are invested with the most pleasing and poetic associations ; of the constituent parts or visible qualities of organized or unorganized beings, especially of the members of the human body, and of the larger animals. Anglo-Saxon has also furnished us with that numerous and always vivid class of words, which denote the cries, postures, and motions of animated existence. These are amongst the most energetic that any language can supply ; for the same reason that words expressive of individual objects are always stronger than general terms. It is a sound and universal maxim of rhetoric, that the more abstract the term is, the less vivid—the more special, the more vivid. Now, almost all the words which are expressive of these specialties of posture and bodily action, are the purest Saxon ; such as to sit, to stand, to lie, to run, to walk, to leap, to stagger, to slip, to slide, to stride, to glide, to yawn, to gape, to wink, to thrust, to fly, to swim, to creep, to crawl, to spring, to spurn, &c. If all this be true, we need not be surprised at the fact, that in the descriptions of external nature, whether by prose writers or by poets, the most energetic and graphic terms are almost universally Anglo-Saxon. It is as little matter of wonder, that in those simple narratives in which genius and wisdom attempt the most difficult of all tasks—that of teaching philosophy without the forms of it, and of exhibiting general truths in facts and examples, leaving the inferences to be drawn by the instinctive sagacity of human nature—the terms are often almost without exception Anglo-Saxon. It is thus with the narratives of the Old Testament—the history of Joseph, for instance—and with the parables of the New ; perhaps the only compositions in the world which can be translated without losing much in the process, and which, into whatever language translated, at once assumes a most idiomatic dress. The same remark holds good to a certain extent of ‘ Robinson Crusoe,’ ‘ the Vicar of Wakefield,’ ‘ Gulliver’s Travels,’ and other works, in which the bulk of the words are pure Saxon.

INTRODUCTION.

“Thirdly. It is from this language we derive the words which are expressive of the earliest and dearest connexions, and of the strongest and most powerful feelings of our nature ; and which are consequently invested with our oldest and most complicated associations. Their very sound is often a spell for the orator and the poet to ‘ conjure withal.’ It is this language which has given us names for father, mother, husband, wife, brother, sister, son, daughter, child, home, kindred, friends. It is this which has furnished us with the greater part of those metonymies, and other figurative expressions, by which we represent to the imagination, and that in a single word, the reciprocal duties and enjoyments of hospitality, friendship, or love. Such are hearth, roof, fireside. The chief emotions, too, of which we are susceptible, are expressed in the same language as love, hope, fear, sorrow, shame ; and what is of more consequence to the orator and the poet, as well as in common life, the outward signs by which emotion is indicated are almost all Anglo-Saxon. Such are tear, smile, blush, to laugh, to weep, to sigh, to groan. In short, the words generally expressive of the strongest emotions or their outward signs, as well as of almost all the objects or events calculated to call forth either, in all the more stirring scenes of human life from the cradle to the grave, are of Saxon origin. This class of words, therefore, both from the frequency with which they are used and from the depth of meaning attached to them, must necessarily form one of the most important and energetic portions of the language.

“Fourthly. The words which have been earliest used, and which are consequently invested with the strongest associations, are almost all of a similar origin. This, indeed, follows from what has been already said ; for, if the words descriptive of the most ordinary objects of sense, and of the principal varieties and signs of emotion, are Anglo-Saxon, such, from the course of development which the human mind takes, must necessarily be the terms which first fall upon the ear of childhood. Still the fact that they are the earliest, gives them additional power over the mind—a power quite independent of the meaning they convey. They are the words which fall from the lips most dear to us, and carry back the mind to the home of childhood and to the sports of youth. That vocabulary was scanty ; but every word, from the earliest moment to which memory can turn back, has been the established sign of whatever has been most familiar or most curious to us.

“Fifthly. Most of those objects about which the practical reason of man is employed in common life, receive their names from the Anglo-Saxon. It is the language for the most part of business : of the counting-house, the shop, the market, the street, the farm : and however miserable the man who is fond of philosophy or abstract science might be, if he had no other vocabulary but this, we must recollect that language was made not for the few but the many, and that that portion of it which enables the bulk of a nation to express their wants and transact their affairs, must be considered of at least as much importance to general happiness, as that which serves the purposes of philosophical science.

“Sixthly. Nearly all our national proverbs, in which it is truly said, so much of the practical wisdom of a nation resides, and which constitute the manual and vade-mecum of hob-nailed philosophy, are almost wholly Anglo-Saxon.

“Seventhly. A very large proportion (and that always the strongest) of the language of invective, humor, satire, and colloquial pleasantry, is Anglo-Saxon. As to invective, the language of passion is always very ancient; for men were angry and out of temper long before they were philosophers or even merchants. The vocabulary of abuse amongst most nations is not only very copious, but always singularly hearty and idiomatic. Almost all the terms and phrases by which we most energetically express anger, contempt, and indignation, are of Anglo-Saxon origin. Nearly all the obnoxious words and phrases which cause duels and sudden pugilistic contests, are from this language; and a very large proportion of the prosecutions for ‘assault and battery,’ ought, in all fairness, to be charged on the inconvenient strength of the vernacular. The Latin, we apprehend, much to its credit, is very rarely implicated in these unpleasant broils, although it often has a sly way of insinuating the very same things without giving such deadly offence. Again, in giving expression to invective, we naturally seek the most energetic terms we can employ. These, as already said, are the terms which are the most special in their meaning, and the bulk of such words are Anglo-Saxon, particularly those which denote the outward modes of action and the personal peculiarities indicative of the qualities that serve either to excite or express our contempt and indignation. Once more, the passions often seek a more energetic expression in metaphor and other tropes ; but then such figures are always sought—and necessarily, considering the purpose—in mean and vulgar objects, and the majority of the terms which denote such objects are Anglo-Saxon. The dialect of the scullery and kitchen alone furnishes our newspaper writers with a large portion of their figurative vituperation, and it is hard to say what they would do without ‘scum,’ ‘dregs,’ ‘off-scouring,’ ‘filth,’ and the thousand other varieties supplied from such sources. Similar observations apply to the language of satire and humor. The little weaknesses, the foibles, the petty vices, the meannesses, the ludicrous peculiarities of character, with which these are chiefly concerned, as well as the modes of speech, dress, action, habit, etc., by which such peculiarities are externally indicated, are for the most part Anglo-Saxon. Here, too, as in giving expression to invective, the speaker or writer is anxious for the sake of energy to secure the utmost speciality of terms ; while the metaphors and other forms of figurative expression, to which he is prompted by the very same reasons, are necessarily drawn from the most familiar, ordinary, and often vulgar objects. As to the language of familiar dialogue and colloquial pleasantry, we know it is always in a high degree idiomatic both in the terms and phrases employed, and in the construction, and this is a principal reason why the comic drama in every language—and we may say the same of satire—is so difficult to a foreigner.

“ Lastly, it may be stated as a general truth, that while our most abstract and general terms are derived from the Latin, those which denote the special varieties of objects, qualities, and modes of action, are derived from the Anglo-

INTRODUCTION.

Saxon Thus, move and motion are very general terms, and of Latin origin ; but all those terms for expressing nice varieties of bodily motion, enumerated some time since, as well as ten times the number which might be added to them, are Anglo-Saxon. Sound is perhaps Latin, though it may also be Anglo-Saxon, but to buzz, to hum, to clash, to rattle, and innumerable others, are Anglo-Saxon. Color is Latin, but white, black, green, yellow, blue, red, brown, are Anglo-Saxon. Crime is Latin, but murder, theft, robbery—to lie, to steal, are Anglo-Saxon. Member and organ, as applied to the body, are Latin and Greek, but ear, eye, hand, foot, lip, mouth, teeth, hair, finger, nostril, are Anglo-Saxon. Animal is Latin, but man, cow, sheep, calf, cat, are Anglo-Saxon. Number is immediately French, remotely Latin ; but all our cardinal and ordinal numbers, as far as million, are Anglo-Saxon, and that would have been so too, if it had ever entered the heads of our barbarous ancestors to form a conception of such a number."

How, then, can it be doubted, after this beautiful summary of all the words, inflections, grammatical influences, and advantages, that we have derived from the Anglo-Saxon, that the most certain and shortest method of arriving at a thorough and correct comprehension of the English is by the study of its most important and powerful element ? What chemist would think himself acquainted with the properties and characteristics of water, who did not know the virtues of oxygen ? What mineralogist could lay claim to a knowledge of the Granite Rock, who knew not the properties of Mica, or Feldspar, or Quartz ? His knowledge would extend no further than that of the daily laborer, whose life is spent in hewing the rock into shape—or of the South American water carrier, whose estimate of the properties of his commodity is regulated by the supply and demand. How often has it been repeated that a study of the classics is important, because it enables us to understand more thoroughly and employ more correctly English words! And yet we do not derive one half the number of words from the Latin and Greek together, that we do inherit from the Anglo-Saxon; and, as we have before shown, in the still more important influence on the construction and character of our tongue, the classical languages bear no comparison with the Anglo-Saxon. Indeed, with the exception of some synonyms, and some few mere liquid and poetical derivatives, our Teuton brethren, the Germans, have acted more wisely in making their language all-sufficient for itself, and in forming their technical and scientific compound words from elements preëxisting in their own vernacular. They have no occasion to do it, and do not resort to what are called the learned languages for their scientific and metaphysical expressions; and yet no one will pretend to deny, that, as they are the deepest and finest thinkers, so also are they amply supplied with words expressive of the nicest distinctions in German transcendentalism, and of the most accurate definitions in science.* Instead of calling in the aid of the Greek to teach them Geography and Astronomy, they are given the same information under the far more expressive and idiomatic words Erdbeschreibung and Sternkunde; instead of relying on the Latin for venesection and amputation, they are equally skilful with the good old German compounds aderlassen and abschneidung—words, which, compounded of elements already existing in the language,

* We are aware that some of the late German writers, hankering after foreign idioms, have adopted the French Synonyms of scientific words derived from the Latin and Greek, instead of their own compounds, and, like Carlyle, have only marred the beautiful original by their unnecessary Latinisms and Hellenisms.

INTRODUCTION.

are far more forcible, because the components themselves bring to our minds ideas independently of their connexion, just as play-fellow, sweet-heart, and love-letter, speak more directly to the feelings than companion, mistress, and billet-doux, and as thunder-bolt, earth-quake, and whirlpool, carry destruction in their very sound.

We would not wish to be understood, as denying that our language has derived greater variety, more elegance, and in some cases more aptness of expression, from the intermixture of Latin and Greek words. There can be no doubt that to these languages we are indebted for many invaluable synonyms, for many beautiful and sonorous words, and for some modes of expression that we would not willingly part with : but in most cases, their assistance has been rendered at the expense of vigor and vividness. Strength has been sacrificed to beauty, earnestness to elegance. Still less would we wish to be understood by what we have said as inculcating an entire neglect of the study of the classics. No one can delight more in dwelling on "the linked sweetness long drawn out," of the incomparable Homer ; no one can enjoy more keenly the beauties of Virgil, or laugh with more real heartiness over the comedies of Terence ; no one can appreciate more fully, or feel more forcibly the strength, the beauty, and the taste, displayed in the immortal orations of Demosthenes and Cicero than we have ever done. We would not have them neglected or disparaged. But if they are to be read and studied for the purpose of acquiring a more correct and intimate knowledge of our own language, how much more does the Anglo-Saxon merit the attention of the English, or American, or German student ? If they are not to be neglected, and if so much time is spent in their acquisition by our youth, how much more of the student's time ought to be devoted to the great fountain of his mother tongue? We would have every one of our youth make himself acquainted with the character, construction, and vocabulary of this language. Deep scholarship in Anglo-Saxon we do not expect. That must of course be a rare commodity in any country—rarer in ours for reasons already assigned: but a general acquaintance with the language we firmly expect and sincerely hope to see a very common and ordinary acquirement at no remote period—a period when, indeed, it will be considered disgraceful to a well-bred Englishman or American—“utterly disgraceful to a man who makes the slightest pretensions to scholarship, to be ignorant as multitudes—otherwise well-informed—now are of the history and structure of the English tongue; and above all, of the genuine relations of modern English to that ancient dialect of the great Teutonic family, which has ever been and still is incomparably the most important element in its composition.”

But to those who aspire to be orators or poets, this study recommends itself with peculiar force. If the speaker is desirous of appealing to the passions—of arousing the inmost feelings, he must resort to those words which present most strongly and vividly to the mind the idea he is endeavoring to impress. And surely those words which are most specific—those expressions which are associated with our earliest and tenderest feelings—those phrases which bring to mind our closest ties, are such as are best calculated to rivet our attention and challenge our sympathy. And all such words are, as we have already said, native Saxons. If the poet would pour forth a song framed to draw the tear from the manly eye; if he would bind together stanzas that should fire us with feelings of indignation, or arouse us to deeds of valor, he must seek for tender associations, or for strong and energetic language, in the suggestive words derived from the

INTRODUCTION.

Anglo-Saxon. Examine the speeches of those English or American orators who have been the most effective and powerful in addressing an assembly—who have been best able to play upon the feelings, “sive risus essent movendi, sive lachrymae ;” analyse those English national songs which have electrified whole bodies of men, and stirred up to unparalleled exertion armies of soldiers, and see whether three-fourths of the words in both are not Saxon “as it were to the marrow bone.” On the attention of the divine, the philosopher, and the philologist, it urges its strongest claims, in being an important and interesting link in the chain of Ethnography. The latest and most astonishing discoveries in modern science—the most improved theories of light—the revelations of geology—the chronology of the Chinese—the city of Petra—all that at first seemed to wage war with the Mosaic cosmogony, has only tended to confirm the sacred account ; and we do not doubt that the further inquiries and researches of such men as Wiseman, the younger Adelung, and William von Humboldt, will place Ethnography among the first of sciences, as showing conclusively that all the various languages, dead and living, were derived from one original common parent. The study of the Anglo-Saxon will further this result ; and therefore must its introduction be acceptable to the friends of the Bible.

In the following pages the Author of the Anglo-Saxon Grammar (so far as the writer of this Introduction is able to judge, or has had an opportunity of examining) has brought together all that is valuable and known in regard to the structure and grammatical accidents of the language. The sources from which he has had to draw, and the materials with which he was obliged to construct, are well known to all scholars, to be limited indeed ; and we feel that we are but doing sheer justice, and not stepping aside from propriety, when we say thus in advance, that he has made the best and most advantageous structure possible out of such scanty materials, and has wisely and judiciously drawn from such limited sources. This is the only complete Grammar of the language with which we are acquainted, and certainly the only Anglo-Saxon Grammar published in this country. We hope, therefore, that it will not need to be stamped first with the seal of European approval, before it can be received into favor in our own country: but that it will at once, as it certainly deserves, meet with its proper reward, and be adopted as a text-book in our Colleges and High Schools. To that purpose it will be found adapted no less from its size and cheapness, than its real worth. At the same time that it contains all that is necessary and valuable on the subject, it is not encumbered with labored references to collateral languages, which are thought to exhibit great research in the compiler, particularly in reference to a language but little known. From this, the Author (with all the learning that we know him to possess) has judiciously abstained, even at the expense of not being considered so good a linguist as he actually is.

At the request of the publishers, and with the permission of the Author, we have written these pages in the hope that they may serve, in some slight measure, to awaken the attention of the American public to the importance of the study of the Anglo-Saxon, and may aid by that means in increasing the admiration which we ought to entertain for our noble and sonorous language; so that every one may realize the praises bestowed upon it by old Camden, who, in his quaint "Remains," assures us that, "Whereas our tongue is mixed, it is no disgrace. The Italian is pleasant, but without sinews, as a still, fluting water. The French, delicate, but even nice as a woman, scarce daring to open her lippes for fear of marring her countenance. The Spanish, majesticall, but fulsome, running too much on the o, and terrible as the devill in a play. The Dutch, manlike, but withal very harsh, as one ready to pick a quarrel. Now we, in borrowing from them, give the strength of consonants to the Italian ; the full sound of words to the French ; the variety of terminations to the Spanish, and the mollifying of more vowels to the Dutch : and so, like bees, we gather the honey of their good properties, and leave the dregs to themselves. And thus, when substantialnesse combineth with delightfulness, fullnesse with firmnesse, seemliness with portliness, and correctness with stay'dnesse, how can the language which consisteth of all these, sound other than full of all sweetness ?”

ORTHOGRAPHY.

§ 2. á is pronounced like a in fate; é like e in mete; í like i in pine; ú like oo in cool; and ý like y in lyre. Æ has the sound of a in glad, and with the accent, one somewhat broader and more diphthongal.<sup>12</sup>

§ 3. The letters j, k, q, v, and z, are not found in genuine Anglo-Saxon. C was used for k, as in Latin, and cw for q. V was only employed as a "calligraphic variation of u,"<sup>13</sup> while the proper soft sound of z was never admitted in the language.

§ 4. The Anglo-Saxons used the following abbreviations: for and aud, ŷ and ƿ: for þæt and þaet that, ƿ: and for oððe or, and -lice -ly, ƿ. To denote the omission of m likewise, they made a short stroke over the preceding letter: as, þā for þám to the: þonne then, they wrote þōn.

§ 5. The only signs or notes of distinction which they employed, were one dot at the end of each sentence, or of each line of a poem, and three at the close of a complete discourse.<sup>14</sup>

§ 6. The Accentuation will be found wanting for the most part in the printed copies of Anglo-Saxon works, and in some it is altogether omitted. It was generally neglected by the older transcribers.<sup>15</sup> The student will perceive how necessary it is to the proper pronunciation of the language and in fixing the signification of words. Comparison with the Friesic, Lower German, Dutch, Icelandic, and English, throws much light upon the subject.

NOTES.

<sup>2</sup> c: ch, and tch have in many instances succeeded to this letter, either single or double, in the formation of the English: thus, cild a child, wrecca a wretch. A similar transition has taken place in Swedish from the Old Norse, and in Italian from the Latin, but without a change of orthography. K, which expresses the peculiar sound of c, has also been adopted : as, cyng a king. Sc has very often passed into sh : as, fisc, a fish, biscop or bisceop a bishop, naturalized from the Greek ἐπίσκοπος.

NOTES.

It is probable that c was sometimes pronounced like k followed by y consonant, especially before the soft vowels, a sound still heard in cart, carve, and a few other words : as, cealf, cielf, pron. kyelf. Sc follows the same analogy, and was sounded like sk as occasionally heard in sky.

<sup>3</sup> e : e before a, o, had the sound of y consonant, as in eorl, Eádward, eow, pronounced yorl, Yádward, yow, whence it appears to be inserted after c and g. It is also omitted after these two letters, and sometimes interchanged with i.

<sup>4</sup> f : f at the end of a syllable, or between two vowels had probably the sound of v, which is further evident from the substitution of u in its place in many instances.

<sup>5</sup> g : g follows the analogy of c, but it seems also to have had a third sound, that of y, when placed between two of the letters e, i, y, or ae, and not unlikely at the end of words. It had the sound of y in the Moeso-Gothic, a sister dialect of the Anglo-Saxon, and easily passed into that letter in English : as, geár a year, daeg a day, ta'egl a taylor, and by a further change, tail. Cg is usually written for gg : as, licgan for liggan to lie down.

It is probable that the liquid sound of c and g did not exist in the earlier period of the language. Subsequently other consonants acquired the same sound before u, as now heard in pure, tune, etc.

<sup>6</sup> h : the sound of h was very hard, as in heord a herd. At the end of a word or syllable, or united with another consonant in closing a syllable, it was guttural, as is plain from the later and stronger orthography, thurh through, leoht light, dóhtor a daughter, in which gh has taken the place of simple h.

It is to be regretted that in English there has been a transposition of the h when naturally coming before the w : as, hwít white, hwaer where, hwá who.

<sup>7</sup> i : i has the sound of y consonant before e or u, as in iett yet, iúgoth youth. Hence, it is said, the insertion of g in the present tense and present participle of all verbs in -ian : as, ic lufige, for ic lufie I love; lufigende, for lufiende loving, from lufian to love. But see further, § 408.

<sup>8</sup> þ is the Runic D, which in some of the dialects was pronounced

ORTHOGRAPHY.

TH. Ð is a Roman capital with a small hyphen. These two characters are often confounded by writers.

þ represents the hard and ȝ the soft sound of th. The former is generally used at the beginning, and the latter at the end of words and syllables. Rather than retain these two characters as is usually done in adopting the Roman, we have distinguished the tha from the edh by two dots under the th, which represents it: as, th.

The English sometimes has the soft sound of th where the Anglo-Saxon has the hard one, as in this, there; and vice versa.

<sup>10</sup> x: this letter is but seldom used. Its constituents cs are preferred.

<sup>11</sup> y: the sound of this letter originally approached nearer that of the French u or the German ü, than any which we have in English. The i-sound, however, must have taken its place at a very early period.

<sup>12</sup> Æ is set down by some as a distinct letter, as the Anglo-Saxons never admitted diphthongs, and such it must always be considered. Oe is seldom met with. It was introduced by the Scandinavians, but never adopted to any extent. Its sound is that of é.

<sup>14</sup> In employing the Roman character, we have thought it better to introduce the signs now in use.

<sup>15</sup> The grave, circumflex, and acute accents have all three been sometimes employed, but we think that the last alone is sufficient for all practical purposes. It is now impossible to determine the nice shades of pronunciation in the language.

CHAPTER II.

CHANGE OF LETTERS.

§ 7. The student will observe many irregularities in the Anglo-Saxon language. These proceeded from the variety of writers, their little acquaintance with each other, the inevitable changes introduced by the lapse of time, and other causes. Irregularities must obtain to a great extent in the early stage of every language.<sup>1</sup>

The Anglo-Saxon writers very often confounded some letters, and used them indifferently for each other. They transposed, substituted, and inserted or added both vowels and consonants. The following are some of the principal changes.<sup>2</sup>

1. With regard to Consonants.

§ 8. B, f, and u before a vowel,<sup>3</sup> are often interchanged :

<sup>1</sup> Many of the various forms of words that we meet with evidently owe their existence to the carelessness of transcribers, while others belong to a difference of dialect. The Anglo-Saxon in its purest days, though in its early stage, was a highly cultivated tongue, with all the elements of indefinite improvement within itself.

<sup>2</sup> The changes or permutations which letters, especially the vowels, undergo in the derivation and inflection of words in Anglo-Saxon, are very numerous. These will be better learned as they appear in their proper places.

<sup>3</sup> Also p. "In all languages, and especially in the dialects of cognate languages, the letters employing the same organs of utterance are continually interchanged."

as, beofer, beber a beaver; ífig, íuig ivy; ofer, ober, ouer over.

§ 9. C interchanges with g, k and q:<sup>4</sup> as, t̥honces, t̥honges of thanks; cyth, kyth kindred; cwen, quen a woman, wife, queen. It also, either single or double, frequently becomes h before s or th, and especially before t: as, ahsian for acsian, or axian to ask; he séhth for he sécth he seeks, from sécan to seek; hí strehton for hí strecton they stretched, from streccan to stretch.

§ 10. D and t are often used indiscriminately for each other: as, he mette for he metde he met, from métan to meet.

§ 11. G is changed into h in many cases: as, dahum for dagum with days; burh for burg a town. It is added to words which end with i: as, híg for hí they; and omitted in those which terminate in -ig: as, drí for dríg dry. It is also omitted before d and th: as, maedn for maegdn a maiden; maeth for maegth power; and before n, it is either left out, or gn becomes gen, or is transposed to ng: as, waegn, waen a wagon, wain; t̥hegn, t̥hen, t̥haegen, t̥heng, a servant,thane; regn, ren, reng rain. Ng is likewise changed into nc and ngc: as, sang, sanc a song; ring, ringc a ring.

§ 12. H is sometimes changed into g: as, he t̥hág for he t̥háh he grew, from t̥heón to grow. It is also found added to monosyllables ending in a vowel: as, freóh for freó free.

§ 13. L is written double or single indiscriminately at the end of monosyllables, but the reduplication ceases when, in lengthening the word, a consonant follows: as, well or wel well; N. eall, A. eal-ne all. It is also frequently aspirated: as, hlútan for lútan to bow.

<sup>4</sup> K and q in later Saxon. Q combining one u-sound in itself, is followed by this letter instead of w, when substituted for c.

§ 14. M sometimes interchanges with f: as, emnet̃heow, efne-t̃heow a fellow-servant.

§ 15. N follows the same law in regard to reduplication as l.

§ 16. R is often transposed in words: as, forst for frost frost; gaers for graes grass. Like l, too, it is aspirated; as, reód, hreód a reed; reol, hreol a reel.

§ 17. X is frequently supplied by cs: as, neorcsen for neorxen quiet; or, it is changed into sc: as, tusc for tux a tusk or tuks.

2. With regard to the Vowels.

§ 18. A and ae interchange as follows:

A and ae: as, apl, aepl an apple; aecer, acer a field.

A', aa, dé, ai and é: as, ác, aac, aéc an oak; ád, aad a heap; áer, ár, ér ere, before; án, aén, ain one.

A and e: as, arc, erc an ark; elne, alne an ell.

A and o, particularly before n in a short syllable: as, man, mon a man; sand, sond sand; ob, ab a beam.

Ae and e: as, aeft, eft again; egsa, aegsa fear.

Ae and oe: as, aeghwaer, oeghwaer everywhere.

Ae and y: as, aelc, ylc each one.

§ 19. E, ea and eo as follows:

E, ae and ei: as, ege, aege, eige terror.

Ea, e, a, ae, and eo: as, ceaster, cester a fortified town; eall or eal, al, ael all; Easter, Eoster Easter. Eá, é and dé: as, eác, éc, aéc also; eá, aé water; eá and ý: as, eáthelic, ýthelic easy.

Eo, e and y: as, seolf, self, sylf self; ea, io and i: as, seoc, seac, sioc, sic sick; eu, and u, especially after w: as, eowu, euwa an ewe; sweord, swurd a sword.

NOTE.—E is not unfrequently added at the end of words which do not require it, and rejected in many cases where it naturally belongs.

§ 20. I is interchanged with e and y: as, igland, egland, ygland (igland, égland, ýgland?) an island; and likewise goes into ie and ii: as, il (il?), iel, iil a hedge-hog. I and y also interchange: as, hí, hý they.

§ 21. O is changed into e, i, u and y besides a: as, on, an, en, in in; pearroc, pearruc a park; ofer, yfer a shore.

§ 22. U is sometimes converted into eo, o and y: as, scucca, sceocca, scocca a devil; ufera, yfera higher.

§ 22. Y is changed into e, o, ie and i: as, ylp, elp an elephant; yrf, orf, ierfe, erfe cattle; ylc, ilc same. Also ý, into eó and ú: as, ýrre, eórrre ire, anger; ýtra, útra outer.

§ 24. The forms which the same word often assumes, are various: as, saé, sé, seó, sewe, siew a sea; hwom, hwem, hwaem, hwamm, huomm, waem a corner; stare, staer, stearn, staern a thrush; rinan, renian, regnan, hregnan to rain; forod, forad, forud, fród old, debilitated.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> The most of the forms coming under our notice in the inflection of words, will be given for the convenience of the student.

PART II.—ETYMOLOGY.

CHAPTER I.

PARTS OF SPEECH.

§ 25. There are nine Parts of Speech: the Article, Noun, Adjective, Pronoun, Verb, Adverb, Preposition, Conjunction and Interjection.

§ 26. These are divided into declinable and indeclinable.

The declinable Parts of Speech are, the Article, Noun, Adjective, Pronoun and Verb: the Adverb, Preposition, Conjunction and Interjection are indeclinable.

NUMBERS.

§ 27. There are two Numbers in Anglo-Saxon, the Singular and Plural: as, smith a smith, smithas smiths. A Dual form, however, evidently exists in the pronoun of the First and Second Persons: as, ic I, wit we two: tþú thou, gyt ye two.<sup>1</sup>

§ 28. Nouns follow the declension to which they belong with regard to the formation of their plurals. But some are the same in both numbers: as, cild child, or children;

<sup>1</sup> Wit and git as Duals are also found in the Moeso-Gothic. One might suppose them to be the remains of a Dual that existed generally in a more original language. But is not wit contracted from we we, and twégen, twá two, and gyt from ge ye and twégen, twá?

ETYMOLOGY.

wif wife, or wives ; word word, or words. Others are used only in the singular : as, gold gold ; seolfer silver ; while many names of nations are found in the plural alone : as, Dene the Danes ; Angle the Angles. Irregular plurals also exist : as, bók a book, béc books ; mús a mouse, mýs mice ; aeg an egg, aegru eggs.

CASES.

§ 29. The Cases are four, the Nominative, Genitive, Dative and Accusative.<sup>2</sup>

GENDERS.

§ 30. There are three, the Masculine, Feminine and Neuter.

The Masculine and Feminine genders are often assigned to things without life. Hence there are two ways of discovering the gender of nouns : 1. By the Signification ; 2. By the Termination.

1. By the Signification.

§ 31. The names of all animals of the male kind are masculine and those of the female kind are feminine, whatever the final letter or syllable may be.

2. By the Termination.<sup>3</sup>

§ 32. The Masculine terminations are,
-a ; -el, -ol, -ul, or -l ; -els ; -end ; -ere, or -er ; -ing ;
-m ; -nath, -ath, or -oth ; -ot, or -t ; -scype or -scipe.

<sup>2</sup> The Ablative case properly belongs to the Anglo-Saxon, but it is the same as the Dative, with the exception of a few distinct forms given by some grammarians.

<sup>3</sup> These rules for determining the gender of nouns from the final syllable can be only general. The best mode of ascertaining it is by comparison with the Icelandic and German.

GENDERS AND DECLENSIONS.

The Feminine are,

-d, or -t ; -en ; -estre, -ystre, or -istre ; -isse, -ysse, or -esse ; -ele ; -nes, -nesse, -nys, or -nis ; -u, or -o ; -ung, or -ing ; -uth, or -th.

The Neuter are,

-ed, -et, or -ed ; -ern ; -incle ; -ling.

NOTE 1.—Sunne or sunna sun is feminine, and mona moon is masculine.<sup>4</sup>

NOTE 2.—The gender of compound words may be ascertained by that of the last part.

DECLENSIONS.

§ 33. There are three Declensions, the First, Second and Third, distinguished by the ending of the Genitive case singular.

General Rules for the Declensions.

§ 34. The Dative case singular is either like the Genitive, or it is formed from it by rejecting the s when the termination is -es.

The Accusative singular is always like the Nominative, except when the Genitive ends in -an: it then takes the same termination.

In all the declensions the Genitive plural ends in -a ;<sup>5</sup> the Dative in -um, or -on<sup>6</sup> and the Accusative is like the Nominative.

CHAPTER II.

THE ARTICLES.

§ 35. The Anglo-Saxon has two Articles, both definite : se, seó, t̃haet, and t̃he the. The former is declinable, and put before proper as well as common names : the latter is indeclinable, and often used for all the cases of se, seó, t̃haet, especially in adverbial expressions and in corrupt forms of the language.

§ 36. Se, seó, t̃haet comprises the three genders, and is thus declined :

DECLENSION OF NOUNS.

First Declension.

§ 39. This Declension is known by the Genitive singular in -es. It includes a large part of the Anglo-Saxon nouns: almost all masculines ending in -dóm, -end derived from participles, -ere, or -er, -els, -ing, -erd, -ord, -est, -ath, -eth, -oth, -scype, or -scipe, and generally those in -l, -m, -n and -r: also neuters in -e and -incle, those ending in one consonant or more, dissyllables in -el, -ol, -ul, -en and -er, and the terminations -ed, -et, -od.

§ 40. Nouns ending in a consonant add -es to form the Genitive, while those in -e take -s alone : as,<sup>3</sup>

Se smith the smith.

| D. | Attil-an | to, for, with Attila. |
| A. | Attil-an | Attila.               |

|    |             |                            |
|----|-------------|----------------------------|
| N. | seó Ann-a   | Anna.               |
| G. | etc. Ann-an | of Anna.            |
| D. | Ann-an      | to, for, with Anna. |
| A. | Ann-an      | Anna.               |

§ 50. Names of countries and places in -a are sometimes indeclinable : as, N. and A. Sicília Sicily. Again, they are inflected as in Latin : as N. Európa, A. Európa Europe, the Gen. and Dat. being Európe for Európa.

§ 51. The Genitive plural is not unfrequently contracted : as, Myrena cýning king of the Mercians.

<sup>14</sup> i. e. the woman Anna, or the said Anna.

Third Declension.

§ 52. The Third Declension is known by the Genitive singular in -e. It includes only feminine nouns, and those feminines which end in a consonant, or in -o, or -u; also the terminations -ung, -nis, -nes, or -nys, -uth, and in a few instances, -ing.

§ 53. Nouns ending in a consonant make the Genitive plural in -a alone: as,

Singular.

|    |        |                                        |
|----|--------|----------------------------------------|
| N. | wyln   | a female servant.               |
| G. | wyln-e | of a female servant.            |
| D. | wyln-e | to, for, with a female servant. |
| A. | wyln-e | a female servant.               |

|    |         |                                       |
|----|---------|---------------------------------------|
| N. | wyln-a  | female servants.               |
| G. | wyln-a  | of female servants.            |
| D. | wyln-um | to, for, with female servants. |
| A. | wyln-a  | female servants.               |

§ 54. Those in -u, or -o, have the Genitive plural in -ena, and sometimes the Accusative singular in -u: as,

Singular.

|    |           |                             |
|----|-----------|-----------------------------|
| N. | den-u     | a den.               |
| G. | den-e     | of a den.            |
| D. | den-e     | to, for, with a den. |
| A. | den-e (u) | a den.               |

<sup>15</sup> Wyln; wylen the original, uncontracted form. Nouns of this declension in -e and -en are often contracted in the Nominative, and these with others in -er, almost always in the oblique cases.

ETYMOLOGY.

§ 61. So also bók a book, bróc breeches, fót a foot, gós a goose, lús a louse, mús a mouse, turf a turf, make in the Dative singular and in the Nominative and Accusative plural, béc, bréc, fét, gés, lýs, mýs, tyrf.

§ 62. Faeder a father, is indeclinable in the singular,<sup>25</sup> but the plural has the regular forms of the first declension.

§ 63. Nouns in -eó, or -eóh, preserve the ó through all the cases except the Genitive and Dative plural: as, feó (feóh) money, Gen. feós, Dat. feó, etc.

ETYMOLOGY.

§ 64. Sáe sea, æ law, and eá water, are not declined in the singular, except in the Genitive, which, especially in composition, makes sáees, saés and eás in the case of those two nouns.<sup>26</sup>

§ 65. Some nouns in -u change this letter into w or ew in the oblique cases : as, searu<sup>27</sup> device, Gen. searewes, or searwes, etc. Eowu<sup>28</sup> a ewe, has eowes in the Genitive singular, and eowa in the Nominative and Accusative with eowena in the Genitive plural.

§ 66. Feld<sup>29</sup> a field, has felda in the Dative, while the Genitive terminates in -es.

§ 67. The Dative of duru a door, is dura and duran besides the regular form dure.

§ 68. Freónd<sup>30</sup> a friend, and feónd<sup>31</sup> an enemy, have frýnd and fýnd in the Nominative and Accusative plural.

§ 69. The termination -waru the population of a place collectively, has -e, -as, or -an in the Nom. plural.

§ 70. The inflection of names of men formed from feminine substantives is according to that of their primitives.

§ 71. Some nouns are indeclinable throughout : as, æthelo nobility.

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF NOUNS.

§ 72. Nouns may be divided into Primitive and Secondary.

§ 73. All Primitive Nouns in Anglo-Saxon are monosyllabic in their nature : as, wer a man, ác an oak, mód mind, heord a herd.

§ 74. From these Primitive Nouns were originally formed many adjectives and verbs, which gave birth in

turn to other nouns. It was also by combining two or more words that many were made. These either appear with their constituents in full, or they present one complete word or more, together with the fragment of another having a definite signification.

§ 75. The Secondary Nouns were formed :

1. By the union of two or more primitive nouns : as, áccorn an acorn, from ác an oak, and corn a corn ; wíntreow a vine, from wín wine, and treow a tree ; eáland an island, from eá water, and land land.

2. By adding significant terminations, which are in fact other nouns, to primitive nouns and words already compounded, or derived :<sup>32</sup> as, cildhád childhood, from cild a

<sup>32</sup> The following are the most of the terminations with definite meanings, which enter into the composition of common nouns :

-a, denoting a person, an agent or actor, and sometimes an inanimate object.

-dóm, expressive of authority, property, right, office, quality, state or condition : Eng. -dom.

-e, denoting either a person, or an inanimate object.

-els, causative.

-end, denoting the agent.

-en, with the idea of possession, or subjection.

-ere, -er, from wer a man, and signifying a person or agent : Eng. -er

-ern, from aern a house or room, denoting place.

-estre, -istre, -ystre, either a complete word or the fragment of a word once probably signifying a woman : Eng. -stress, -ess.

-hád, which expresses person, form, sex, quality, state or condition : Eng. -hood.

-ing, denoting, 1. action ; 2. origin, and as such forming patronymics : Eng. -ing.

-isse, -ysse, -esse, softened from ides, idese, a female ; Eng. -ess.

-lác, -la'ec, -lácú, expressive of offering or giving : Eng. -lock.

-ling, denoting, 1. a state or condition ; 2. an image, example, and forming diminutives, besides seeming very often to imply contempt : Eng. -ling.

child, and the termination -hád; sáedere a sower or seeder, from sáed seed, and -ere; sangistre a songstress or song-woman, from sang a song, and -istre; cárleásnys carelessness, from cárleás careless, and -nys.

3. From verbs: as, gitsung desire, from gitsian to desire; hálging a hallowing, consecration, from hálgian to hallow, consecrate; swutelung a manifestation, from swutelian to manifest.

4. By employing primitive nouns without any change in a variety of figurative senses: as, cniht a boy, and also a youth, servant, attendant, disciple, client and soldier, a KNIGHT.

5. By the union of significant prefixes to primitive nouns and others already formed in any way: as, sib peace, concord, unsib discord, enmity; rihtwisnes, righteousness, onrihtwisnes unrighteousness; cenning birth, ed-cenning regeneration.<sup>33</sup>

-nes, -nis, -nys, signifying quality or state, and forming abstract nouns: Eng. -ness.

-raeden, denoting, 1. a state or condition; 2. the manner, reason, law or rule of action.

-ric, as a termination, expressive of dominion or power: Eng. -ric.

-scipe, scype, signifying state, office or dignity: Eng. -ship.

-ster, denoting guidance, direction, from steor-e id.

-ung, denoting action or passion.

-waru, from wer a man. See again § 69.

Besides these there are others the significations of which cannot well be defined, but which seem to denote action, condition, quality, endowment, or the like. They are, -ed, -od, -ot, -d, -t; -el, -ol, -l, -ele, -nd, -nath, -noth, -ath, oth, -uth, -th, -o, -u, etc.

<sup>33</sup> The prefixes being more or less common to different parts of speech, we deem it best to give them all in this place. They are, a-, ae-, negative, deteriorative or oppositional. But a prefixed to verbs especially, in many cases either does not alter the meaning, or it adds some little force or intensity to the original signification: Eng. a-, sometimes in the latter sense.

PROPER NAMES.

§ 76. The names of men and women as well as of places among the Anglo-Saxons being significant, are frequently compound words. Those of individuals appear to have been mostly the effect of caprice or the effusions of ael-, eall-, eal-, signifying all: Eng. all-, al-.

aeg-, sometimes ge-, from aelc each, every, and signifying every, united with pronouns and adverbs.

and- denoting opposition.

be-; this prefix is used in various ways: 1. it is privative; 2. it denotes nearness, intensity or excess; 3. it usually gives an active signification to verbs; 4. it seems to add nothing to the meaning: Eng. be- in some cases.

ed-, signifying again.

for- is either the English for, or it gives the idea of privation or deterioration. It is often confounded with fore-, although very different in meaning.

ge- is employed in different ways like be-: 1. it forms a sort of collective; 2. it often seems void of meaning; 3. it gives verbs an active signification, or changes them from literal to figurative; 4. it is a mere augment.

mis-, denoting a defect, an error, evil, unlikeness: Eng. mis-n-, negative: Eng. n-.

on-, either privative or signifying in, on, upon: Eng. in-, un-, or in, on, upon, detached.

or-, privative.

oth-, signifying from, out, out of; and sometimes like and-.

to-, either to in English, or with the idea of deterioration. In the former case it should be written with the accent, in the latter, without it.

sam-, signifying either half, or, when used as an abbreviation of samod, together with.

un-, denoting privation, deterioration, or opposition. It is supposed either to be allied to the German ohne without, or to be derived from the prefix which follows. It is very probable that on- privative has the same origin: Eng. un-, in-.

wan-, won-, from wana wanting, lacking, and implying a deficiency.

wither-, denoting opposition. V. Anal., Anglo-Sax., Glossary, pass.

<sup>34</sup> The Anglo-Saxons sometimes added distinctive appellations to their original names. These were taken either from some peculiarity of appearance, or from residence, office, trade, possession or affinity. Not unfrequently, too, the addition expresses the name of the individual's father. Thus we find, Wulfsic se blaca, Wulfsic the Pale; Eádríc se hwíta, or Eadric the White; Aelfric aet Bertúne, Aelfric living at Bertune; Leófwyn ealderman, or Leofwyn an Elderman or Senator; Sweigen scyldwyrtha, or Sweigen a Shieldmaker; Aegelpig munuc, or Aegelpig a Monk; Eádwig his maeg, or Eadwig his Friend or Kinsman; Aelmaer Aelfrics suna, or Aelmaer Aelfric's Son; Wulfrig Madding, or Wulfrig the Son of Madd or Maddson. Hence the names of the Whites, Greens, Cliffords, Brightons, Aldermans, Cooks, Smiths, Canons, Friends, Johnsons, Eppings, and those which owe their origin to ridicule or derision, and other causes. But it was not until after the Norman conquest that surnames became generally established in England.

<sup>35</sup> Ric is used in the composition of male names both as a prefix and as a termination.

CHAPTER IV.

ADJECTIVES.

§ 77. Adjectives in Anglo-Saxon have variable terminations, to correspond with the nouns which they describe.

§ 78. They have two forms of declension, the Indefinite and Definite.

§ 79. The Indefinite form is used when the adjective stands alone with its substantive : the Definite when it is preceded by an article, or by a demonstrative or possessive pronoun, even when the last is governed in the Gen. case.

Indefinite Terminations.

|    | Singular. |     |                   | Plural. |

| A. | -ne              | -e  | -                 | -e.            |

<sup>36</sup> There are some terminations which are common to names of places : as, burh a city, tún a town, ceaster, or cester from the Latin castrum a fortified camp, cities so called being on such sites ; -wic, the present -wich, as well as -wick, a dwelling, station, village, castle or bay, according to the situation of the places, and others.

DECLENSION OF ADJECTIVES.

Indefinite Adjectives.

§ 81. All Adjectives of one syllable, except those which contain ae before a single consonant ; also those ending in -e, participles in -ende,<sup>3</sup> -od, ed ; dissyllables in -el, etc.. are declined in the following manner :

gód good

Singular.

|    | m.     | f.     | n.     |                            |
|----|--------|--------|--------|----------------------------|
| N. | gód    | gód    | gód    | good.               |
| G. | gód-es | gód-re | gód-es | of good.            |
| D. | gód-um | gód-re | gód-um | to, for, with good. |
| A. | gód-ne | gód-e  | gód    | good.               |

Plural

|    | m. f. n. |                            |
|----|----------|----------------------------|
| N. | gód-e    | good.               |
| G. | gód-ra   | of good.            |
| D. | gód-um   | to, for, with good. |
| A. | gód-e    | good.               |

§ 82. Monosyllables ending in a single consonant preceded by ae, whenever the same consonant is followed by

<sup>3</sup> Nouns in -end derived from Indef. Participles and denoting the agent, are declined, as before stated, according to the 1st declension and should never be confounded with the participles themselves. The Anglo-Saxon writers always made the distinction.

DECLENSION OF ADJECTIVES.

a, e, o, or u, in the course of inflection change ae into a; and these, as well as polysyllabic adjectives formed by the derivative terminations, -ful, -ig, -isc, -leás, -lic, -sum, etc., and participles passive of the 2d and 3d conjugations in -en, make the Nominative singular feminine, and the Nominative and Accusative plural neuter in, -u :<sup>4</sup> as,

Singular.

|    | m.      | f.      | n.     |                            |
|----|---------|---------|--------|----------------------------|
| N. | laet    | lat-u   | laet   | late.               |
| G. | lat-es  | laet-re | lat-es | of late.            |
| D. | lat-um  | laet-re | lat-um | to, for, with late. |
| A. | laet-ne | lat-e   | laet   | late.               |

Plural.

|    | m. f.   | n.      |                            |
|----|---------|---------|----------------------------|
| N. | lat-e   | lat-u   | late.               |
| G. | laet-ra | laet-ra | of late.            |
| D. | lat-um  | lat-um  | to, for, with late. |
| A. | lat-e   | lat-u   | late.               |

§ 83. Adjectives ending in -e, drop the e in declining :

as,

niwe new.

Singular.

|    | m.     | f.     | n.     |                |
|----|--------|--------|--------|----------------|
| N. | niw-e  | niw-e  | niw-e  | new.    |
| G. | niw-es | niw-re | niw-es | of new. |
|    | etc.   | etc.   | etc.   | etc.    |

Plural.

|    | m. f. n. |                |
|----|----------|----------------|
| N. | niw-e    | new.    |
| G. | niw-ra   | of new. |
|    | etc.     | etc.    |

ETYMOLOGY.

§ 84. Those which end in a single consonant after a short vowel, double the consonant in declining ; but one consonant is omitted before -ne, -re, -ra : as, grim severe.

Singular.

| N. | grim-me  | severe.    |
| G. | grim-ra  | of severe. |
|    | etc.     | etc.       |

§ 85. Dissyllables, when the inflection begins with a vowel, are often contracted : as, hálig holy.

Singular.

|    | m.      | f.       | n.       |                 |

|    | etc.    | etc.     | etc.     | etc.     |

Plural.

|    | m. f. n. |                 |
|----|----------|-----------------|
| N. | hálg-e   | holy.    |
| G. | hálig-ra | of holy. |
|    | etc.     | etc.     |

Definite Adjectives.

§ 86. The inflections of Definite Adjectives are the same as those of the second declension of nouns.

§ 87. The definite termination of the Nominative singular masculine, is always -a, and that of the feminine and neuter, -e : as,

COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES.

§ 90. There are three degrees of comparison, the Positive, Comparative, and Superlative.

§ 91. The Positive becomes the Comparative both definite and indefinite by annexing the termination -ra for the masculine, and -re<sup>7</sup> for the feminine and neuter: as, smael small, smael-ra, smael-re smaller, indefinite, and se smael-ra, seó, thaet smael-re the smaller, definite.

§ 92. The Superlative is formed from the Positive indefinitely by adding the termination -ost or -est, and definitely by adding -esta for the masculine, and -este<sup>8</sup> for the feminine and neuter: as, smal-est smallest, and se smal esta, seó, thaet smal-este the smallest.

Irregular Comparisons.

§ 93. The following list contains the most of these:

| Pos.                          | Comp.               | Superl.                |

| ere, before            | before       | first.          |
| eald                   | yldra        | yldest.         |
| old                    | elder, older | eldest, oldest. |
| feaw                   |                     | feawost.        |
| few                    |                     | fewest.         |
| feor, adv.             | fyrra        | fyrrest.        |
| far                    | farther      | farthest.       |

<sup>7</sup> The termination -or, sometimes -ur and -ar, through which -ra, -re are obtained, is never used but adverbially.

<sup>8</sup> Instead of -ost, or -est, we sometimes find -ust and -ast, and in the place of -esta, -este, not unfrequently -osta, -oste, we meet with -ista or -ysta, -iste or -yste.

feaw: properly a Definitive Pronoun. See § 107.

feor, feorr.

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF ADJECTIVES.

§ 94. Adjectives in Anglo-Saxon owe their origin either to nouns or verbs.

1. They are nouns used in a descriptive sense : as, hige diligence and diligent ; láth evil and pernicious.<sup>10</sup>

2. They are nouns with meaning terminations added to them :<sup>11</sup> as, gold gold, gold-en golden ; blód blood, blód-ig bloody ; wer a man, wer-lic manlike, manly ; waestm fruit, waestm-baer fruitful ; faeder a father, faeder-leás fatherless ; æ a law, æ-faest fixed in the law, pious.

<sup>10</sup> In the course of time slight changes were made in many instances for the purpose of distinguishing the adjective from the noun.

-baer, -baere, -bor, having the signification of producing, and related to the root of beran to bear, produce, which also probably comes from the Teutonic bar fruit.

-cund, denoting a kind, origin, or likeness, from cynd id.

-e seems to be merely distinctive.

-ed, -ad, -od, -ud, -yd, -d, -t, probably the Perfect participle of a lost verb, and signifying furnished or provided with. Adjectives and participles thus formed usually have ge- prefixed to them, and such words may be considered as belonging in every instance to the latter class. Eng. -ed, -d.

-en and sometimes -an, from unnan to give, grant, and denoting addition. See farther § 408. Eng. -en.

-ende, possibly from the same verb, the termination of participles indefinite.

-ern from aern, as in nouns, and denoting towards a place. Eng. -ern.

-faest, signifying fast, very, perfectly, effectually. Eng. -fast.

-full, -ful, expressive of fulness, completeness, or perfection. It is also a prefix. Eng. -ful.

-ig, signifying addition, probably from ican to eke, add. Eng. -y.

-iht, the same.

-isc, denoting the external quality of a subject, like. Eng. -ish.

3. They are formed from nouns as well as from other adjectives by significant prefixes:<sup>12</sup> as, mód mind, ae-mód out of mind, mad; geleáflic credible, un-geleáflic incredible; mihtig<sup>13</sup> powerful, tir-meahtig exceedingly powerful.

4. They are formed by the union of nouns and numerals: as, án-eáge one-eyed, from án one, and eáge an eye; twý-feald twofold, double, from twý two, and feald<sup>14</sup> a fold.

5. They are formed from participles: as, bebeódendlic imperative, from the indefinite participle of the verb bebeóðan to command, with the termination -lic: or they still present the participial form alone: as, berende fruitful, from beran to bear.

6. They present compound forms from simple adjectives, or from simple adjectives and participles: as, ylpen-báenen made of ivory, from ylpen belonging to an elephant, and báenen formed of bone; ethel-boren noble-born, from ethel noble, and boren born.

7. They are further formed from pronouns and adverbs with significant terminations: as, úre-lendisc<sup>15</sup> of our country; úte-weard outward external.

-leás, denoting privation. It is also used as a prefix. Eng. -less

-lic, expressive of similitude, or likeness. Eng. -like, -ly.

-ol, -ul, -el, -al, usually denoting a mental quality.

sum, signifying diminution, from the pronoun sum some. Eng. -some.

<sup>15</sup> -lendisc as a termination compounded of land land, a country, and -isc, signifies belonging to a country.

PRONOUNS.

8. The increase of the same adjective from the Positive, is by means of significant endings.<sup>16</sup>

§ 101. Sylf sometimes takes the Dative of the personal pronoun before it : as, mesylf myself, t̃hésylf thyself, himsylf himself. It is also annexed to nouns : as, Petrus-sylf Peter's self, Crist-sylf Christ himself. But when used definitely, it signifies the same : as, se sylfa man the same man.

t̃hē, Dat. and Acc., t̃heh, t̃hec : eowr, eowr, iower, iuer, iuerr, iur, iure : eow, Dat. and Acc., eowih, eowic, iow, iowih, iu, iuh, iuih, iuch, iwh, geow : gīt, gyt, inc, incg : incer, incere, incer, inca : inc, Dat., incg, incrum : inc, Acc., incg, incit.

his, hys : him, hym, hien : hine, hyne : heo, hió, used also for he and hí : hire, hyre, hiere : hit, Nom. and Acc., hyt, it : his, hys : him, hym.

hí, Nom. and Acc., híg, hie, hy' : hira, hyra, heora, hiora, hiera : him, heom, eom, hiom.

2. Adjective Pronouns.

§ 102. The Adjective Pronouns are only the Genitive cases of personal pronouns taken and declined like the indefinite form of gód. They are mín my, thín thy, incer our two, incer your two, úre our, and eower your. The personal pronoun of the third person has no declinable adjective pronoun, but the sense of the same is always expressed by his, hire, hira, the Genitive cases of the primitive forms.

§ 103. To define the reciprocal sense in his, hire, hira, more accurately, the word ágen<sup>3</sup> own, declined like gód, is added: as, Tó his ágenre t̃hearfe to his own necessity. This sense the poets also express by sín: as, Ofslóh bróth-or sínne slew his own brother.

§ 104. Declension of mín my.

3. Definitive Pronouns.

§ 107. The Definitive Pronouns are those which define or point out either classes or individuals. The following are the most of them :<sup>7</sup>

nén ;—náthor, nauther, nawther ;—other, othyr ;—sum, som ;—swilc, swylc, swelc ;—thes, see § 110 ;—thyllic, thylic, thylc, thillic, thillec ; unmanig, unmaneg ;—ylc, ilc.

<sup>9</sup> The following variations are met with : bégen, béggen, beágan, búgan ;—bá, both Nom. and Acc., bú ;—bégra, bégea ;—bám, ba'em. A compound form also appears ; as, bátwá, bútér, bútwér, bútá, buté, literally both the two. Thus we have, Bátwá Adam and Eue Adam and Eve both together.

Bégen, and sum signifying some, about, as sume ten some or about ten, are usually regarded as numerals, like ánseald, etc. Indeed sum, eall, and other pronouns of the kind, might very properly be styled indefinite numerals. The number combined with sum, in most cases, is put in the Genitive plural.

§ 111. The Definite that is expressed by se, seó, thæt.

4. Relative and Interrogative Pronouns.

§ 112. The articles se, seó, thæt and thē are generally used for the Relatives who, which, that. The Interrogatives hwá who? hwaet what? are thus declined :

Singular.

|       |                                     |    |                                   |

|       | A. hwone whom .              |    | hwaet <sup>11</sup> what . |

§ 113. Hwaet is sometimes used for hwá : as, Hwaet is thēs, Who is this? Hwaet is thēs mannes sunu, Who is this son of man?

§ 114. Like hwá, hwaet, are also declined :

|       |                                |    |                                   |

|       | gehwá whoever .         |    | gehwaet whatever .         |
|       | swá-hwá-swá whosoever . |    | swá-hwaet-swá whatsoever . |

§ 115. Hwylc<sup>12</sup> who? which? or what? and swá-hwylc.

thissere, thysere in the Gen. and Dat. both ; thisum sing. and plur., thysum, thissum, thyssum, thison, thyson, theossum ; — thisne, thysne ; — thissa, thissiera.

The express form given for the Ablative singular is,

|       |        |        |
|-------|--------|--------|
| m.    | f.     | n.     |
| thise | thisse | thise. |

<sup>11</sup> In this pronoun we find : hwá, huá, wuá ; hwám, hwa'em ; hwone, lwaene.

The distinct form given for the Ablative singular is,

|              |
|--------------|
| m. f. n.     |
| hwí or hwy'. |

<sup>12</sup> Hwylc, hwilc, hwelc.

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF ARTICLES AND PRONOUNS.

swá whosoever, whichsoever, or whatsoever, are declined like indefinite adjectives.

§ 116. Hwylc and its compounds are often used in a definitive sense, signifying each, every one, etc.

§ 117. Hwaether whether? which of the two? has the same declension as hwylc. Its compounds are definitive.

§ 118. He who is expressed by se the, or the the.

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF THE ARTICLES AND PRONOUNS.

§ 119. Pronouns, as well as the Articles in Anglo-Saxon, have been supposed to be derived from nouns and verbs.

1. Se, seó are said to come either from saegan to say, or from seón to see, and thaet and the, from thicgan to take.

2. He, heó, hit are likewise considered as owing their origin to hātan to call, name.

But what is the origin of ic and thū?

The derivation of the Articles and of the Pronouns of the third person from verbs we think not only very improbable and far-fetched, but unnatural.

Se, which exchanges the sibilant for th out of the Nominative feminine, is in English, the; in German, der; in Dutch, de; in Danish and Swedish, den; while the initial of the kindred word in other cognate languages or dialects, with the exception of the Moeso-Gothic which has sa, is either th, or d.<sup>13</sup> We therefore consider the and theó to be more ancient forms than se and seó.<sup>14</sup>

Anyone closely observing the sound of the, will perceive

<sup>13</sup> 'o, 'η, το the definite article in Greek was probably at one time το, τη, το, or more anciently θο, θη, θοτ.

that it is original and arbitrary, and in itself definite with regard to another person or thing.<sup>15</sup>

Ic, and in English, I; in Dutch and Moeso-Gothic, ik; in German, ich; in Danish, jeg; in Swedish, jag; in Icelandic, eg, jeg;<sup>16</sup> in Latin, eg-o; in Greek, ἐγ-ώ; in Slavonic, az; in Lithuanian, asz; in Hebrew, as a postfix ī; in Zend, az-ēm; in Samkrit,<sup>17</sup> ah-am; in Malay, ek-o, all indicate a common source and an original sound pointing to the individual speaking in his own person.

Thú, in English, thou; in Dutch, German, Danish, and Swedish, du; in Moeso-Gothic and Icelandic, þú; in Latin and Hindustanee, tu; in Greek, σὺ, tú; in Slavonic ty; in Lithuanian, tù; in Hebrew ā', ātā; in Armenian, te, to; in Persian, tu, tou; in Zend, tû-m; in Samkrit, tu-am; and the like in other languages and dialects either nearly related or far removed from each other, is arbitrary in its nature, and leads the mind to the person addressed and in proximity.

He, from which heó and hit are formed by a slight modification, in English, he; in Dutch, hy; in German, er; in Danish and Swedish, han; in Icelandic, hann; in Hebrew, hī, seems to be simple and primitive, and to have reference to the person spoken of as absent.<sup>18</sup>

This view may be fanciful, but it is at least very plausible.

3. Sylf self appears to be related in its derivative syllable syl, to sawl, saul the soul. Sjel soul was used in Old <sup>15</sup> Observe the difference between thaer there and her here in the organs employed to express them: the former in its sound determinate with regard to another place, the latter, with regard to that where the person is speaking.

<sup>18</sup> The same difference is perceptible in the plural of these pronouns in all the persons, as well as in the oblique cases.

Swedish in the place of the modern sjelf self, and the Hebrew nēphēsh was likewise employed to express either idea.

Ágen own appears to be no other than ágan to have or possess, to OWN; or it may be the perfect participle of the same verb.

5. Þes this in its sound seems to be definite with respect to something near. Compare it with tþaet that.

6. Hwá who? seems to be arbitrary, and to contain the interrogative within itself.

7. Some of the Pronouns are compounded: as, maenig many, from man one, they, and the termination -ig; naenig no one, from ne not and áenig anyone, and áenig itself, from aén one and -ig; hwaet what, from hwá who and tþaet that; hwylc which? from hwá and líc like; swylc such, from swá so and líc. Other examples might be given.

CHAPTER VI.

THE NUMERAL.

§ 120. The Numeral combines the Substantive and the Adjective, and ought to be treated as a distinct Part of Speech. It is divided into Cardinal and Ordinal Numbers: as, án one; se forma, seó, tþaet forme the first.

1. Cardinal Numbers. These are,

|   |                    |              |
|---|--------------------|--------------|
| 1 | án                 | one   |

§ 121. An one is declined like gód.<sup>2</sup> Twégen, twá two and thrý, threó three are declined in the following manner

1. twégen two.

|    | m.      | f. n.            |                           |
|----|---------|------------------|---------------------------|
| N. | twégen  | twá              | two.               |
| G. | twég-ra | twég-ra          | of two.            |
| D. | twám    | twám             | to, for, with two. |
| A. | twégen  | twá <sup>3</sup> | two.               |

2. thrý three.

|    | m.       | f. n.              |                             |
|----|----------|--------------------|-----------------------------|
| N. | thrý    | threó              | three.               |
| G. | threó-ra | threó-ra           | of three.            |
| D. | thrym    | thrym              | to, for, with three. |
| A. | thrý    | threó <sup>4</sup> | three.               |

§ 122. Feower four makes the Genitive feowera; and we sometimes find fífa, síxa, seofona as the same case of fif five, six six, seofon seven. When used absolutely, tyn ten makes the Nominative and Accusative tyne and the Dative tynum: also twelf twelve, the Nominative twelfe, the Genitive twelfa, and the Dative twelfum.

<sup>3</sup> In the declension of twégen, we have twá, tú, tuá, tuu, twíh or twíg, tuíg, twy' either in the Nom. and Acc. or in both; twégra, twé-gera, twéga; twám, twae'm.

§ 123. Twentig and the other numerals in -tig are thus inflected :

|    |                    |                              |
|----|--------------------|------------------------------|
|    | <sup>m f. n.</sup> |                              |
| N. | twentig            | twenty.               |
| G. | twentig-ra         | of twenty.            |
| D. | twentig-um         | to, for, with twenty. |
| A. | twentig            | twenty.               |

§ 124. All these numerals in -tig are used in the Nominative and Accusative, both as nouns which govern the Genitive and as adjectives which agree with nouns in the same case.

§ 125. Hund and hundred<sup>5</sup> a hundred and thūsend a thousand are treated in their inflection as nouns of the first declension.

§ 126. All the Ordinal Numbers with the exception of se other the second are declined definitely : as, se forma seó, thaet forme the first.

§ 127. Healf<sup>6</sup> half when used as a numeral is generally placed after the cardinal or ordinal which agrees with it. and which it diminishes by the one half of a unit : as, six healf marc five marcs and a half; thridde healf two and a half.

§ 128. Distributives are made by a repetition of the Cardinal numbers : as, six and six six and six, by sixes.

§ 129. The Anglo-Saxons also expressed numbers by the different positions of the letters I, V, X, L, C, and M.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Hundred is, properly speaking, a noun with the signification of centuria in Latin : it not only means the number hundred, but it is applied to a division of a county : as, innan his hundrede within his hundred. It is compounded of hund and red, a word supposed to mean a stroke or line, "it being the ancient custom to count or number by strokes or lines."

<sup>7</sup> It would seem that the letters I, X, E, O, were first assumed to represent the decimal numbers 1, 10, 100, 1000, and then by bisecting

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF THE NUMERALS.

§ 130. 1. The Cardinals án, twégen, thrý, feower, fif, six, seofon, eahta, nigon, are evidently simple.

2. Tyn appears to be a contracted form from twá two and hand a hand; signifying both the hands or ten fingers, the common way of counting in the early stage of mankind, as always with children.

3. Endlufon and twelf are compounded from án and twégen, twá, and laefan to leave.<sup>8</sup> Threottýne, feowertyne, fiftyne, sixtyne, seofontýne, eahtatýne, nigontýne, owe their origin to tyn and the simple numbers án, twégen, etc.

4. Twentig is compounded of twá, tyn and the termination -ig, and signifies two tens or twice two hands added together. The same formation obtains in all the numerals which end in -tig. It is true that from seventy to a hundred and twenty inclusive, hund is prefixed, but more as a refinement than anything else, since it is sometimes omitted when the same word, used to express a hundred, goes before. In ancient times hund signified only ten, but its meaning was afterwards extended to ten times ten.

5. The tens are increased by placing the units first with and, but after hund a hundred the smaller number is set last, while the noun is repeated. When the smaller number is placed before hund, it denotes multiplication. Thus, án and twentig one and twenty; án hund wintra and thrittig wintra one hundred and thirty years.

6. Thúsend is thought to be nothing but the more complete Moeso-Gothic tigos hund or taihuns hund ten times a hundred.

7. Ordinals are formed from the Cardinal numbers, as six six, se sixta, seó, t̃haet sixte the sixth.

CHAPTER VII.

VERBS.

§ 131. Verbs in Anglo-Saxon may be divided into two orders, the Simple and the Complex ;<sup>1</sup> and also subdivided into Conjugations and Classes. They are likewise Mixed and Anomalous.

CONJUGATIONS.

§ 132. There are three Conjugations, the 1st belonging to the Simple order of verbs, and the 2d and 3d to the Complex order. Under each of these are arranged three Classes.

MOODS.

§ 133. These are four, the Indicative, Subjunctive, Imperative and Infinitive.

TENSES.

§ 134. The Tenses are only two, the Indefinite and the Perfect ; the former referring either to the present time, or to a future period.

<sup>1</sup> Complex verbs receive their appellation from the complex modifications which the vowels of their roots undergo in forming the Perfect tense.

ETYMOLOGY.

NUMBERS.

§ 135. There are two Numbers, the Singular and the Plural.

PERSONS.

§ 136. Each number contains three Persons, the 1st, 2d, and 3d.

PARTICIPLES.

§ 137. There are two Participles, the Indefinite and the Perfect.

GERUND.

§ 138. The Gerund, termed by some a Second Infinitive, is always preceded by the preposition, tó.<sup>2</sup> With the verb of existence, it has a passive signification, or expresses what ought to be done.<sup>3</sup>

CONJUGATION OF VERBS.

1. The Simple Order.

§ 139. This Order is distinguished by having the Perfect tense of two or more syllables with the termination -ode, -ede, -de, or -te,<sup>4</sup> while the Perfect Participle ends in -od, -ed, -d or -t: as,

1st Conjugation.

| Class.     | Inf.           | Perf.    |               | Perf. Part. |                |
|------------|----------------|----------|---------------|-------------|----------------|
| 1 luf-ian  | to love | luf-ode  | loved  | luf-od      | loved.  |
| 2 baern-an | to burn | baern-de | burned | baern-ed    | burned. |
| 3 syll-an  | to give | seal-de  | gave   | seald       | given.  |

<sup>3</sup> The Gerund combines the nature of the noun with that of the verb, just as the Participle unites the properties of the adjective and of the verb.

<sup>4</sup> The difference between the endings -de and -te, and -d and -t, depends altogether upon the hardness or softness of the preceding consonant.

We will here observe that a-, be-, for-, ge-, to-, and in some few instances, on-, are indifferently and interchangeably prefixed to verbs, especially to perfect tenses and perfect participles; ge- to the perfect tense is universal. Some verbs are not met with in their simple state, but only occur with these prefixes. Very often indeed they affect the signification of the simple word.

§ 148. Remarks on the 3d Conjugation.

1. The 1st Class contains those verbs which have a short i (y) before mb, mn, mp, nc, nd, ng, nn, rn; a short a (o) in the Perfect, and u in the Perfect Participle: also those which have a short e or eo before gd; ht; ld, lf, lg, ll, lp, lt; rc, rf, rg, rn, rp, rs; sc, st; ea (ae) short in the Perfect, and o in the Perfect Participle.

write out;—sceótan, scótan, besceótan;—burnen, geburnen;—writen, gewriten.

2. The 2d Class comprises those which have a hard i (i) in the Indefinite, and a in the Perfect.

3. The 3d Class bears a near resemblance to the 2d.

FORMATION OF THE DIFFERENT PARTS OF THE VERB.

§ 149. Imperative Mood.—This part of the Verb is formed from the Infinitive by rejecting the termination -an : but if the final consonant of the root be double, one of the consonants is also thrown away and e put in its place. Verbs in -ian make the Imperative in -a. Thus, baern-an, baern; syll-an, syll-e; luf-ian, luf-a.

§ 150. Indefinite Participle.—This Participle is formed by rejecting the Infinitive ending -an, and adding the termination -ende : as, baern-an, baern-ende.

§ 151. Gerund.—The Gerund appears to be the Dative case of the Infinitive declined as a noun, the a of the termination -an being sometimes changed into e : as, wrít-an, wrít-anne; baern-an, baern-enne.

§ 152. The Perfect tense and Perfect Participle, and, to some extent, the Persons, are formed differently in the Simple and in the Complex Verbs.

1. Simple Verbs.

§ 153. Perfect Tense.—The Perfect tense rejects the -an or -ian, and adds -ode, -ede, or -de to the root : as, luf-ian, luf-ode; segl-ian, segl-ode or segl-ede. The form -de, which is a contracted one, belongs mostly to verbs having d, f, g, l, m, n, r, s, w, and th before the Infinitive termination : as, baern-an, baern-de; alýs-an, alýs-de.

§ 154. Verbs which end in -dan or -tan preceded by a consonant, do not take an additional d or t; and those having either c or cc before the termination -an, change the c or cc into h whenever t follows : as, send-an, send-e ; pliht-an, pliht-e ; recc-an, reh-te.

§ 155. In many cases the letters t, p, c, h, x, and s after another consonant, and preceding the Infinitive -an, not only contract the Perfect tense, but also change the d into t : as, dypp-an, dypp-edē, dyp-de, dyp-te.

§ 156. Perfect Participle—The Perfect Participle is formed by changing the -an or -ian of the Infinitive into -ed or -od. It is also frequently contracted like the Perfect tense when t, p, c, h, x, or s preceded by another consonant, terminates the root of the verb, while d passes into t. Sometimes the root itself is changed and the e of the -ed rejected. Thus, baern-an, baern-ed ; luf-ian, luf-od ; dypp-an, dypp-ed, dyppd, dyppt and dypt ; syll-an, seald.

§ 157. The syllable ge- is not uncommonly prefixed to the Perfect Participle in both orders of verbs : as, lufod, gelufod ; faren, gefaren.

§ 158. Persons.—The First person singular of the Indef. Indic. is formed from the Infinitive by changing the termination into -e, the Second, by changing it into -st, -ast, or -est, and the Third, into -th, -ath, or -eth : as, baern-an, baern-e, baern-st, baern-th, etc. All the persons of the Plural end in -ath, but -an with a vowel before it makes -iath : as, baern-an, we, ge, hí baern-ath ; luf-ian, we, ge, hí luf-iath.

§ 159. Verbs in -dan and -san have -t in the third person singular instead of the aspirate -th, while d before -an also makes the second person in -tst, though -dst is sometimes found. Verbs in -than and -tan do not receive th additional in the third person. Thus, fēd-an, fēt ; rāes-an, rāest ; send-an, sentst ; cyth-an, cyth ; hát-an, háēt.

§ 160. Whenever a verb has a double consonant one is always rejected in forming the persons in case another follows. And where it would make too harsh a sound to add st or th to the bare root, an e is usually inserted. Thus, spill-an, spil-st, spil-th ; nemn-an, nemn-est, nemn-eth.

§ 161. In the Perfect tense the second person singular adds st to the first, and the third is like the first. The Plural rejects the final e of the first person singular, and puts on in its place.

§ 162. In the Indef. Sub. all the persons of the Singular are like the first person of the same tense Indicative, while the Plural adds -on, -an, or -ion, -ian, as the case may be, to the root of the verb.

§ 163. The Perfect tense is like the Perfect Indicative, except that it does not add st to the first person singular to form the second.

2. Complex Verbs.

§ 164. Perfect Tense and Perfect Participle.—The Perfect tense is formed by rejecting the Infinitive termination with various changes of the radical vowel : the Perfect Participle usually modifies the root in the same way, and converts its verbal ending into -en.

§ 165. Verbs, the roots of which present a monosyllabic form with a or ea after the rejection of the Infinitive ending, frequently change the a into o, and sometimes into eo, and the ea generally into eo to form the Perfect tense, while in forming the Perfect Participle no other change takes place than that of the termination : as, stand-an, stód, gestand-en ; beát-an, beot, beát-en.

§ 166. Verbs having e or eo before ll, lf, lg, lt, rf, rg, rp, and the like, make ea, and in some cases ae, in the Perfect tense, and o in the Perfect Participle : as, delf-an dealf, dolf-en.

§ 167. Verbs having i before gn, nn, ng, nc, nd, mb, m, etc., often change this vowel into a in the Perfect tens and into u in the Perfect Participle : as, sinc-an, sanc, sunc-en. The same change of vowel takes place when i occurs before a single consonant : as, nim-an, nam, num-en ; but i becomes á in the tense, and í in the participle : as, slít-an, slát, slit-en.

§ 168. Those Verbs which have either ú or eó in the Infinitive, make the Perfect tense in eá and the Perfect Participle in o : as, clúf-an, cleáf, clof-en ; hreów-an, hreáw, hrow-en.

§ 169. Persons.—The Personal terminations are usually like those in verbs of the Simple Order ; but while in the Indef. Ind. the persons of the Plural retain the vowel of the first person singular, the same is not unfrequently changed in the second and third. Thus, a becomes ae, and occasionally e or y ; e, ea, and u, are converted into y or i ; ó into é ; and ú or eó, into ý : as, Ic bac-e, thú baec-st, he, &c., baec-th, we, ge, hí bac-ath ; Ic stand-e, thú stent-st, he, &c., stent, we, ge, hí stand-ath ; Ic et-e, thú yt-st, he, &c., yt, we, ge, hí et-ath ; Ic sceót-e, thú scýt-st, he, &c., scýt, we, ge, hí sceót-ath.

§ 170. The termination of the third person singular in verbs ending in -dan, -san, -tan, etc., follows the same rules as those given in § 159 : as, ríd-an, ic ríd-e, he, &c., rít or ríd-eth ; et-an, ic et-e, he, &c., yt, etc.

§ 171. In the Perf. Ind. the second person singular commonly ends in -e, and gives form to all the persons of the same number in the Perf. Sub. : as, Ic stód, thú stód-e ; ic, thú, he, &c., stód-e.

§ 172. Verbs taking either u or o in the stem of the Perfect Participle, in most cases have u in that of the second person singular and all the persons of the Plural in the Perfect tense, while the third person singular is like the first : as, crung-en, &c., ic crang, thú crung-e, he, &c., crang, we, ge, hí crung-on.

§ 173. Verbs having i in the radical part of the Inf., and i in the Perfect Participle with á in the first and third persons singular of the Perfect tense, make i in the second, and in all the persons of the Plural : as, arís-an, aris-en, ic, he, &c., arás, t̃hú aris-e, we, ge, hí aris-on § 174. Contracted verbs of one syllable having the Perfect Participle in -gen, terminate the first and third persons singular of the Perfect tense, and the second person singular of the Imperative mood, in -h, besides always inserting this letter before -st, and -th : as t̃hweán, t̃hweg-en, ic, he, &c., t̃hwóh, t̃hweáh t̃hú, t̃hú t̃hwýh-st, he, &c., thwíh-th. Those which terminate the root of the Inf. in g, in general follow the same rule, converting the g into h : as, stíg-an, t̃hú stíh-st, ic, he, &c., stáh.

AUXILIARY VERBS.

§ 175. There are, properly speaking, no verbs in Anglo-Saxon which can lay claim to this peculiar character, as those which have been regarded as such, do not convey the idea of time, especially future time, except seemingly and in rare instances, but rather of possession ; affirmation, or existence ; volition, obligation, command, and necessity. They are, habban; wesán, beón, and weorthan; willan, sceal, magan, cunnan, and móť.

§ 176. Conjugation of the verb habban to have (1 Con. 2 Cl. Irr.<sup>9</sup>)

<sup>9</sup> This verb, strictly speaking, unites two classes of the 1st Conjugation, the 1st and 2d, from the infinitives habban and hafian, different formations from the same root (Note 10). The same may be said of lybban and leófan to live; hycgan and hogian to think; fyligan or fyligean and folgian to follow; and some others. Such are usually considered irregular.

There is also a class of verbs which evidently form their different parts from two or more distinct roots. These will appear in the sequel.

Plural.

2 wyl-ath (ge).

INFINITIVE MOOD.

Indef. wyl-an                      mag-an                      cunn-an.

PARTICIPLES.

Indef. wyl-ende.

COMPOUND TENSES.

§ 179. Hence there can be, in strict terms, neither Compound Tenses, nor a Passive voice in Anglo-Saxon. Thus, in parsing forms like the following, Ic hæbbe geset I have set; ic maeg beón lufod I may be loved, the Part. geset agrees with the Pron. ic; beón is the Inf. governed by maeg, and lufod agrees with ic, as before.

§ 180. A participial form of tense exists as in English: thus, ic eom baernende I am burning; ic wæs lufigende I was loving.

IMPERSONAL VERBS.

§ 181. These are used only in the third person singular with the pronoun hit it, either expressed or understood, while in other respects they are like regular verbs: as, hit sniwith it snows; me t̃húhte it seemed to me, or I thought.

ANOMALOUS VERBS.

§ 182. Man corresponding to one and they in English, often gives the verb an impersonal sense: as, man dyde one or they did, it was done.

MIXED VERBS.

§ 183. Verbs in Anglo-Saxon may be termed Mixed when they combine both Orders in a greater or less degree. A large number will be found to possess this character: as, adrencan;<sup>13</sup> p. adrenc-te; pp. adrenc-ed, adrunc-en to immerge, drown: bringan;<sup>14</sup> p. bróh-te, brang; pp. gebróh-t, brung-en to bring, produce: acwencan;<sup>15</sup> p. acwanc; pp. acwenc-ed, acwin-en to quench, extinguish.

ANOMALOUS VERBS.

§ 183. Anomalous Verbs in Anglo-Saxon are such as cannot be reduced to either of the two Orders. Besides those already inflected, we have the following:

§ 185. ágan<sup>16</sup> to own, deliver, restore.

Perf. Part. ág-en.

§ 195. yrnan<sup>26</sup> to run.

Perf. Part. urn-en.

Ind. Indef. he yrn-th.

— Perf. ic arn we urn-on.

NEGATIVE VERBS.

§ 196. The Anglo-Saxon has a few such forms, made by contracting the negative ne not with the verb. They are as follows :

<sup>25</sup> Unnan : we have given this form in preference to the fuller one geunнан, though contrary to the principle which we have adopted, as will appear in other cases.

Unnon, unnen, unnan ; —uthe, formed in the same way as cuthe, § 178, from un-de.

<sup>26</sup> Yrnan : we have placed this among the anomalous verbs, although it is considered as differing from rinnan, rennan, reonnan, only by the transposition of the r. The form aernan, signifies to let run.

§ 197. nabban<sup>27</sup> not to have.

Perf. Part. nabban.

Ind. Indef. ic nabb-e, t<sub>h</sub>ú naef-st, he naef-th, we nabb-ath.

IMPERFECT VERBS.

§ 405. Besides the Complex verbs which we have classed under their respective conjugations, there are others that present only the Infinitive, or the Infinitive with a single person or more. The same thing also occurs among verbs of the Simple Order.

§ 406. We sometimes meet with words that are evidently participles, although no verbs to which they can be assigned, any longer exist. Such generally have ge prefixed to them when they terminate in -ed, -od, etc.

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF VERBS.

§ 407. In some languages, as in our own, verbs are very often made by the simple employment of nouns with the appropriate signification. This, strictly speaking, is never the case in Anglo-Saxon, though all verbs in that language owe their origin to nouns.

§ 408. Anglo-Saxon verbs are formed from nouns by the addition of the termination -an or -ian ; as, dáel a part, dáel-an to divide ; blót a sacrifice, blót-an to sacrifice ; bod an edict, bod-ian to proclaim ; cár care, cár-ian to take heed, to be anxious. Such forms as beón, teón, fón, hón, are evidently contracted.<sup>170</sup>

<sup>170</sup> The common opinion is that the terminations which go to form verbs from nouns in Anglo-Saxon, are expressive of giving or bestowing, possession and motion, being no other than the infinitives unnan &c.

Sometimes the termination -gean, -gan or -gian is used ; as, sceawi-gean, sceawi-gan to look : gethyld-gian to endure. Indeed, -ian appears to be no other than a softened form of these endings, and to have therefore the same original signification as -an. Thus we have sceawi-gean, sceawi-gan, sceawi-an : gethyld-gian, gethyld-ian ; forht-gean, forht-ian. The last verb has the adjective forht timid for its root. It not unfrequently happens that we find verbs formed in that way from adjectives, and also from words which have dropped out of the Anglo-Saxon vocabulary both as nouns and as adjectives, but which are to be met with in many instances as nouns in the cognate languages and dialects. It is very probable, however, that in all such cases the verb preserves the original noun in itself.

§ 409. In a subsequent stage verbs were compounded ; as, gethancmetan to deliberate, from gethanc mind, thought, and metan to measure, compare : út-gán to go out, from út out and gán to go.

give or bestow, ágan to have or possess, and gán to go. An is generally considered the original form of the first verb, as unnan (anan ?) may be a double form like gangan. But are not ágan and gán themselves made by means of a significant ending ? And did none of the verbs, into the composition of which these are said to enter, exist before they were formed ?

There can be very little doubt that at one time the infinitives of all Anglo-Saxon verbs had the same forms as the corresponding nouns, and that afterwards one verb, and only one, was employed to distinguish the former part of speech from the latter. We will also say that that verb was unnan, geunnan, ind. indef. ic an, gean, signifying to give either to one's self or to another person, or thing. Thus, dáel-an to give a part, blót-an to give a sacrifice, bod-ian to give an edict, cár-ian to give care. Ba'eth-ian to wash, therefore, is not "ba'eth-gán to go to a bath," but ba'eth-gean to give a bath ; and so throughout the vocabulary. See also Appendix D.

ORIGIN AND FORMATION OF THE INDECLINABLE PARTS OF SPEECH.

§ 418. Admitting the view which we have taken of the formation of the Anglo-Saxon verb to be correct, it cannot be considered in any case as the direct source of the adverb, preposition, conjunction and interjection. These must therefore have some other origin assigned them.

The indeclinable parts of speech are either derived from words which still exist in the language as nouns, adjectives or pronouns, or they are themselves primitive words, and, as such, were once used as nouns. In proof of our assertion we will give a few examples.

1. With regard to Adverbs: as,
Hwílum awhile, now, from hwíl time, space.
Thances freely, gratefully, from thanc favor, thanks, will.

<sup>1</sup> The various forms of these are:

eála, aeála, eawlá, hélá;—efne, aefne, eofne.

heno, heonu;—huí, huíg.

Gyt yet, from giht time, staying. This noun in the sense of time is still found united with another word ; as, gebed-giht bed-time. Its other forms are gihth, geht, gyte.

Lange a long time, is probably no other than the accusative fem. of lang long, hwile time being understood.

2. With regard to Prepositions : as,

Bí by, near, is the same as bý a habitation.

Gemang among, taking away the prefix ge, differs but little from menge a crowd, multitude. Menge exists as one of the numerous forms of maenigeo.

Thurh, thuruh, through, thorough are the same as thuru, thuruh, duru a door or passage of any kind.

3. With respect to Conjunctions : as,

Eác also, and, moreover, and eáca addition are one and the same. Eác must have been the form of the noun at one time.

Gif if and the verb gifan to give must both be referred to nouns no longer in existence, but of which the conjunction may preserve the form. It is evident that the particle was needed in the language as soon as the verb.

4. With respect to Interjections : as,

Wá woe ! alas ! which is the noun wá woe, sorrow, affliction.

5. Many of the indeclinable parts of speech in the language are compounds : as, ná-hwaer nowhere ; be-hindan behind ; and-hwaether notwithstanding ; afaest-lá O certainly !

---

PART III.—SYNTAX.

CONSTRUCTION OF SENTENCES.

---

§ 419. Syntax, which is divided into Concord and Government, is the arrangement of words in a sentence, according to certain rules established by usage.

1. CONCORD.

§ 420. The verb agrees with its nominative in number and person : as,

|                |                          |
|----------------|--------------------------|
| Ic lufige      | I love.           |
| Thú writst     | Thou writest.     |
| He wæs rihtwís | He was righteous. |
| We standath    | We stand.         |
| Ge etath       | Ye or you eat.    |
| Wágas burston  | Waves burst.      |

NOTE. The subject usually stands before the verb, but when thá or thonne then, is introduced before a consequent proposition, it is commonly placed after it; although, as in English, the particle in most cases is omitted, and the subject maintains its natural position in the sentence. Negation also, in some instances, has the effect of throwing it after the verb.

§ 421. A noun of multitude may have the verb either in the singular or plural number, or two verbs of different numbers even in the same sentence : as,

|-----------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|
| Eall thæ t folc arás and stódon. | All the people arose and stood. |
|-----------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|

§ 422. Two or more nominatives in the singular connected by and and, either expressed or understood, have the verb in the plural : as,

|                            |                                 |
|----------------------------|---------------------------------|
| Synderlice hine Petrus and | Peter and James and John |
| Iacobus and Ióhannes       | and Andrew asked him     |
| and Andréas acsedon        | privately.               |

§ 423. The verbs of affirmation or existence may have a nominative both before and after them : as,

|                       |                                |
|-----------------------|--------------------------------|
| God waes thaet Word   | God was the Word.       |
| Thaet biþ Godes weorc | That is God's work.     |
| Hig wurdon gefrýnd    | They were made friends. |

§ 424. The first of the two nominatives may be one of the singular neuters, this and thaet, belonging to the verb, and referring to a noun, both in the plural : as,

|                       |                                 |
|-----------------------|---------------------------------|
| Ne synt ná this wódes | These (this) are not the |
| mannes word           | words of a madman.       |

§ 425. The article agrees with the noun which it defines in gender, number and case : as,

|                |                      |
|----------------|----------------------|
| Se anwealda    | The governor. |
| Thá haethenan  | The heathen.  |
| Thaes líchaman | Of the body.  |

§ 426. It also is frequently used before proper names, and after possessive and other pronouns : as,

|                       |                          |
|-----------------------|--------------------------|
| Se Jóhannes           | John.             |
| On thinum thám hálgum | In thy holy name. |
| naman                 |                          |

§ 427. All adjectives, including all other words having the nature of adjectives, agree with the nouns to which they belong in gender, number and case : as,

|                      |                              |
|----------------------|------------------------------|
| Lengran dagas        | Longer days.          |
| Theós stow           | This place.           |
| Twégen englas        | Two angels.           |
| Lócigende ge geseóth | Looking ye shall see. |

§ 428. The perfect participle with habban to have does not always agree with the nominative, but is frequently inflected and made to agree with the governed word : as,

A'enne haefde he swá One he had made so strong.
 swithne geworhtne

§ 429. The relative agrees with its antecedent in gender and number, but its case depends upon some other word in the sentence : as,

|                    |                                 |
|--------------------|---------------------------------|
| Sum wif seó haefde | A certain woman who had. |
| Thú t̃he eart      | Thou who art.            |
| Se man, se t̃he    | The man, he who.         |
| Se be t̃hám        | He by whom.              |

§ 430. The relative is frequently omitted : as,

|                          |                                 |
|--------------------------|---------------------------------|
| Thá waés sum consul Boe- | Then was there a certain |
| tíus waés hátén          | consul (who) was named   |
|                          | Boethius.                |

§ 431. The personal pronoun supplies the place of the relative, when t̃he goes before : as,

|                        |                            |
|------------------------|----------------------------|
| Th̃e t̃hurh his willan | Through whose will. |
| Th̃e t̃hurh hine       | Through whom.       |

§ 432. The interrogative and the word that answers to it, must be in the same case : as,

|                           |                                  |
|---------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Hwaés anlicnys ys t̃his ? | Whose image is this ? Cæ- |
| Th̃aes Cáseres.           | sar's.                    |

§ 433. Nouns signifying the same thing agree in case : as,

|                |                     |
|----------------|---------------------|
| Aelfred Cyning | King Alfred. |
|----------------|---------------------|

§ 434. Sometimes a noun defined by the article is repeated after the pronoun which expresses it, agreeing with it in the same case : as,

|               |                       |
|---------------|-----------------------|
| He se bisceop | He the bishop. |
|---------------|-----------------------|

2. GOVERNMENT.

§ 435. One noun governs another, when a different person or thing is signified, in the genitive case : as,

|              |                           |
|--------------|---------------------------|
| Godes mildse | God's mercy.       |
| Waetera sæs  | Waters of the sea. |

§ 436. A noun united with an adjective, which expresses either praise or blame, is put in the genitive : as,

|                             |                                     |
|-----------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| This folc is heardes módes. | This people is of hard mind. |
| He wæs aethelre strynde.    | He was of a noble race.      |

§ 437. Nouns denoting measure, value, age, and the like, are put in the genitive : as,

|                    |                           |
|--------------------|---------------------------|
| Threóra míla brád  | Three miles broad. |
| Sex peninga wyrthe | Six pence worth.   |
| A'nes geáres lamb  | A yearling lamb.   |

§ 438. Nouns answering the question when? are put either in the genitive or the dative ; but how long? in the accusative : as,

|                                     |                                           |
|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------------------|
| This wæs feórthes geáres            | This was in the fourth year.       |
| Othre síthe                         | At another time.                   |
| Thaer híg wáeron seofon dagas fulle | They were there seven entire days. |

§ 439. A noun answering the question where? may be put in the genitive : as,

|                 |                                 |
|-----------------|---------------------------------|
| Eorthan getenge | Prostrate on the ground. |
|-----------------|---------------------------------|

§ 440. Hám home, when the question is made by whither? is put in the accusative : as,

|                |                           |
|----------------|---------------------------|
| Thá he hám com | When he came home. |
|----------------|---------------------------|

§ 441. The cause, manner and instrument in relation to a thing are put in the dative case : as,

|                   |                               |
|-------------------|-------------------------------|
| His ágenum willum | Of his own will.       |
| Micelre stefne    | With a loud voice.     |
| Billum abreótan.  | With bills to destroy. |

§ 442. Nouns are used absolutely in the dative case with participles : as,

|                   |                          |
|-------------------|--------------------------|
| Gebígedum cneowum | Knees being bent. |
| Him thencendum    | He thinking.      |

§ 443. A pronoun in the neuter gender sometimes governs the genitive case singular : as,

|                |                       |
|----------------|-----------------------|
| Nánþing grénes | Nothing green. |
|----------------|-----------------------|

§ 444. Adjectives denoting plenty, want, desert, likeness, dignity, care or desire, knowledge, ignorance, etc., govern either the dative or the genitive : as,

|                     |                                      |
|---------------------|--------------------------------------|
| Full Hálgum Gáste   | Full of the Holy Spirit.      |
| Fugel fetherum deál | A bird deficient in feathers. |
| Deathes scyldig     | Deserving death.              |

§ 445. Partitives, superlatives, interrogatives and numerals, usually employ the genitive case plural : as,

|                                   |                                                      |
|-----------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------|
| Naénig þinga                      | No one of things.                             |
| Scipío, se besta Rómanawitena | Scipio, the best of the Ro-man senators. |
| Twentig wintra                    | Twenty years.                                 |

§ 446. The comparative degree governs nouns and pronouns in the dative case, when it can be translated by than : as,

|                   |                                |
|-------------------|--------------------------------|
| Hefigeran þaære æ | Weightier than the law. |
|-------------------|--------------------------------|

§ 447. Verbs for the most part govern the accusative when a direct object is implied : as,

|                     |                         |
|---------------------|-------------------------|
| Þisne man ic lufige | I love this man. |
|---------------------|-------------------------|

NOTE. The object is commonly placed before the verb ; deviations from this rule, though, are frequent.

GOVERNMENT.

§ 448. Verbs of governing, wanting, enjoying, and the like, require the genitive case : as,

|                            |                                             |
|----------------------------|---------------------------------------------|
| He wealt ealles            | He governs all.                      |
| Ne thearf he nānes thinges | Nor needs he anything.               |
| Gif hí thaes wuda benugon  | If they have enjoyment of the woods. |

§ 449. Verbs of serving, listening, answering, etc., govern the dative case : as,

|                         |                                               |
|-------------------------|-----------------------------------------------|
| We theowiath blithelice | We will serve the king with joy.       |
| thām cynge              |                                               |
| Sunu mín, hlyste mínre  | My son, listen to my counsel.          |
| láre                    |                                               |
| Thá ne myhton híg him   | Then were they not able to answer him. |
| andswarian              |                                               |

§ 450. A verb of affirmation or existence may govern the dative : as,

|                     |                                    |
|---------------------|------------------------------------|
| Wés us fáele freónd | Be to us a faithful friend. |
|---------------------|------------------------------------|

§ 451. An impersonal verb governs the dative : as,

|           |                         |
|-----------|-------------------------|
| Me thúhte | It seemed to me. |
|-----------|-------------------------|

§ 452. Reflexive verbs govern the pronoun in the accusative : as,

|             |                       |
|-------------|-----------------------|
| Ic me reste | I rest myself. |
|-------------|-----------------------|

NOTE. Reflexive and impersonal verbs generally follow both the subject and the object.

§ 453. Verbs of thanking, admonishing, etc., govern the dative case of the person with the genitive of the thing : as,

|---------------------------|----------------------------------|
| Sceolde his drihtne than- | Should thank his lord for |
| cian thaes leānes         | the reward.               |
| Mana thone thaes angylde  | Admonish that one of the  |
|                           | recompense.               |

§ 454. Verbs of ordering, giving, doing, and the like, govern the accusative with the dative : as,

|                          |                                |
|--------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Ṭhás ṭh̄ing ic eow beóde | This thing I order you. |
| Hwaet gífst ṭhú me       | What givest thou me ?   |
| Dóth ge him ṭh̄at sylfe  | Do ye the same to them. |

§ 455. Verbs of asking, teaching, etc., govern the accusative both of the person and thing : as,

|                                     |                                        |
|-------------------------------------|----------------------------------------|
| Hyne axodon ṭh̄á bigspell           | They asked of him the parable.  |
| Ic ṭh̄é maeg táecan otherṭh̄ing | I can teach thee another thing. |

§ 456. Verbs of naming or terming govern both the object and the appellation in the accusative : as,

|                                       |                                         |
|---------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------|
| God het ṭh̄á faestnisse heo-fenan | God called the firmament heaven. |
| Nemde hine Drihten.                   | Termed him Lord.                 |

§ 457. Sometimes, however, we find the appellation in the nominative : as,

|                                                   |                                                               |
|---------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|
| Ṭh̄a waés sum consul ṭh̄aetwe heretoha hátath | Then was there a certain consul that we call heretoha. |
|---------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|

§ 458. But hátan signifying to be called or named, takes a nominative both before and after it : as,

|                  |                                |
|------------------|--------------------------------|
| Se hátte Lúçifer | Who was called Lucifer. |
|------------------|--------------------------------|

§ 459. One verb governs another that depends upon it, in the infinitive mood : as,

|                         |                                        |
|-------------------------|----------------------------------------|
| Hwaet sceal ic singan ? | What shall or ought I to sing ? |
|-------------------------|----------------------------------------|

§ 460. The infinitive mood may be preceded by the accusative case : as,

|                          |                           |
|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Swá ge geseóth me habban | As ye see me have. |
|--------------------------|---------------------------|

§ 461. The gerund is always governed by the preposition tó which precedes it : as,

Ic dó eow tó witanne      I do you to wit.

§ 462. Participles and gerunds have the same government as the verbs to which they belong : as,

Cwethende þæt ylce ge-      Uttering the same prayer.
bed

Hearran tó habbanne      A lord to have.

§ 463. The perfect participle of a verb which governs two cases, when united with a verb of existence, retains only the latter of them : as,

Wæs him nama sceapen      A name was given him.

§ 464. Adverbs qualify other words, and some of them may be defined by the indeclinable article : as,

Wíslice ic sprece      I speak wisely.

Tó micel      Too much.

Neáh fif *þús*enda were      Almost five thousand men.

Swithe wel      Very well.

Þe laes      The less.

Þý má      The more.

§ 465. Two or more negatives strengthen the negation : as,

Ne geseáh naefre nán man      No man ever (never) saw God      (not) God.

§ 466. Some adverbs govern the genitive : as,

Forth nihtes      Far in the night.

Mid laes worda      With less words.

Neáhst *þá*ære eaxe      Nearest the axle.

NOTE. Adverbs for the most part are placed arbitrarily in the sentence. Ne always stands before the verb which it qualifies. Words compounded with this particle do not express a complete negation unless it is also added in its simple state, and occupies its proper position. When ná having the sense of not, is used in connexion with it, the verb is placed between them. Nor and not are expressed by ne ne when one ne already precedes, or after náther neither, by only a single ne in each member.

§ 467. Prepositions govern different cases as specified in § 413. Thus,

|                  |                              |
|------------------|------------------------------|
| Tómiddes hyra    | In the midst of them. |
| Of aelcum treowe | Of every tree.        |
| Thurh me sylfne  | By myself.            |

§ 468. Conjunctions connect sentences and parts of sentences, as well as words of the same kind : as,

|                                                                 |                                                               |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------|---------------------------------------------------------------|
| Ic eom wín-eard and ge synt twigu                               | I am a vine and ye are branches.                       |
| Gesceóp God heofenan and eorþan                                 | God created heaven and earth.                          |
| Oth ðhone án and twentigo-than daeg ðhaes ylcanmonthes. | Until the one and twentiethday of the same month. |

§ 469. The conjunctions gif if, þæt that, sam whether, þheáh though, swilce as if, etc., are followed by the subjunctive mood when anything doubtful or contingent is implied : as,

|                                             |                                                           |
|---------------------------------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------|
| Gif he wille and cunne hisdæda andettan | If he will and can confesshis deeds.          |
| Hwaet dó ic þæt ic écelíf áge           | What shall I do that I mayhave eternal life ? |
| Sam hió monnum gódþhince                | Whether it may seem goodto men.               |

§ 470. But when a simple declaration is made, the indicative follows : as,

|                |                   |
|----------------|-------------------|
| Gif we secgath | If we say. |
|----------------|-------------------|

§ 471. The verbal conjunction utan, uton, utun let us, governs the infinitive : as

|                        |                                |
|------------------------|--------------------------------|
| Utan biddan God        | Let us beseech God.     |
| Uton gán heonon        | Let us go hence.        |
| Utun faran tó Bethleem | Let us go to Bethlehem. |

§ 472. Interjections may be followed by a nominative, dative or accusative case : as,

|                 |                            |
|-----------------|----------------------------|
| Lá thú lícetere | O thou hypocrite !  |
| Wá tḥám men     | Wo to the man !     |
| Wá eow bóceras  | Wo to you scribes ! |

§ 473. The indefinite form of the adjective is used with common nouns, when the interjection is either expressed or understood : as,

|                       |                                 |
|-----------------------|---------------------------------|
| Eálá, leóf hláford    | Alas ! beloved master.   |
| Awyrgeðe woruld-sorga | Accursed worldly cares ! |

§ 474. But with pronouns of the first and second persons, the definite form usually occurs : as,

|            |                       |
|------------|-----------------------|
| Ic wrecca  | Wretched me !  |
| Ṭhú stunta | Foolish thou ! |

OF

ANGLO-SAXON POETRY IN GENERAL.

§ 475. Anglo-Saxon poetry in its nature resembles the abrupt, nervous expressions of man in his uncultivated state. Its leading characteristic is periphrasis, which is always mingled with metaphor, and sometimes in great abundance, while artificial inversions of words and phrases are not uncommon. In its constitution it is precisely such as we would expect to meet with in an age when bards sung the praises of heroes, taking up and arranging the epithets showered upon them by the applauding multitude, interspersed with any ideas that might occur to their own minds. And this feature appears as well when sacred subjects are the poet's theme as any others. The praises of the Deity and of the warrior chieftain are celebrated in like strains.

§ 476. The poetry of the Anglo-Saxons is of two kinds, native or vernacular and Latin. The latter originated from the Roman and follows the same laws. It is the construction of the former that requires a brief consideration in this place.

§ 477. The only rule which they appear to have observed in the composition of their native verses was that of pleasing the ear, and this they effected by combining their words into a rhythmical cadence. “Rhythmus,” says Bede, “is a modulated composition of words, not according to the laws of metre, but adapted in the number of its syllables to the judgment of the ear, as are the verses of our vulgar (or native) poets. Rhythm may exist without metre, but there cannot be metre without rhythm, which is thus more clearly defined.

“Metre is an artificial rule with modulation: rhythmus is the modulation without the rule. Yet, for the most part, you may find, by a sort of chance, some rule in rhythm, but this is not from an artificial government of the syllables. It arises because the sound and the modulation lead to it. The vulgar poets effect this rustically: the skilful attain it by their skill.”

§ 478. This rhythmus “the skilful” produced by such a choice and arrangement of their words, not disregarding accent, that the same length of time was required for pronouncing any two or more corresponding lines in a poem, although one of them might contain fewer syllables than the other. But in general they were satisfied with a near approach to the proper cadence. The following examples will illustrate the principle. Thus,

Thóhton tilian
Fylle on faetum—
Úrig faethera
Sálowig pada—Wordum hérigen,
Módum lufien—
Heáfod ealra
Heáh gesceafta,
Freá Aelmihtig—

Judith.

Again :

Wereda wuldor - cyning—
Ymb the heolster - sceádo—
Thurh thínra meahta spéd.—

Caedmon.

Also :

Mine weá - thearfa ongunnon,
Thaet thaes monnes
Magas hycgon,
Thurh tyrodne gethóht,
Thaet hý todaeldon unc :
Thaet wit, gewíðost
In woruld - ríce,
Lifdon láth - lícost,
And mec longade.
Hát mec hláford mín
Hér heard niman.

Exile's Song.

And lastly :

Thaet is wyrthe,
Thaet the wer - theóða
Secgon Dryhtne thanc
Dugutha gehwylcre,
The us, síth and cér,
Simle gefremede,
Thurh manigfealdra
Maegna gerýno.

Hymn on the Creation.

§ 479. Alliteration, though sometimes used, was never a fundamental principle in Anglo-Saxon poetry. It consists in employing three words beginning with the same letter, if a consonant, in two adjacent and connected lines of verse. The most important alliterative letter, termed the chief letter, always stands in the second line, while the two others which are called assistants, occupy places in the first. The following extract from a poem on the Day of Judgment, furnishes examples of this sort of alliteration, and likewise contains rhyme. Thus,

Swá helle hearthu
Swá heofenes maerthu ,
Swá leohte leoht,
Swá láthe niht ;
Swá *ᥚ*hrymmes *ᥚ*hraece,
Swá *ᥚ*hystra wraece ;
Swá mid Drihten *ᥚ*reám,
Swá mid *ᥚ*eoflum hreám ;
Swá wíte mid wráthum,
Swá wuldor mid árum ;
Swá líf, swá death,
Swá him leóf bíth.

§ 480. In prefixed words the alliterative letter is the one that comes after the prefix ; and whenever the chief letter is a vowel the assistants are also vowels, but not necessarily the same. The initial of an unemphatic particle is never considered. But the reader must not expect to find an alliteration in every case regularly constituted.

§ 481. All the poetry of the Anglo-Saxons may be arranged under three heads, songs or ballads, narrative poems or romances, and lyrics. By the latter term we must understand their productions of a miscellaneous kind. Only a few specimens of their ballads and romances in the vernacular language have come down to us.

<sup>1</sup> The foregoing phrases which comprise the most of those in common use, have been given as they are generally found in Anglo-Saxon works. Some of them, as will have been perceived, are adverbial and conjunctival, and others prepositional. The syntactical order of each member will also have been observed.

APPENDIX A.

ON THE ALPHABET OF THE ANGLO-SAXONS.

“IT has been much doubted whether the Anglo-Saxons had the use of letters when they possessed themselves of England. It is certain that no specimen of any Saxon writing, anterior to their conversion to Christianity, can be produced. It cannot, therefore, be proved that they had letters by any direct evidence, and yet some reasons may be stated which make it not altogether safe to assert too positively, that our ancestors were ignorant of the art of writing in their pagan state.

1st. Alphabetical characters were used by the Northern nations on the Baltic before they received Christianity,<sup>1</sup> and the origin of these is ascribed to Odin, who heads the genealogies of the ancient Saxon chieftains as well as those of Sweden, Norway, and Denmark : and who is stated to have settled in Saxony before he advanced to the North. Either the pagan Saxons were acquainted with the Runic characters, or they were introduced in the North after the fifth century, when the Saxons came to Britain, and before the middle of the sixth, when they are mentioned by Fortunatus, which is contrary to the history and traditions of the Scandinavian nations, and to probability. We may remark, that Run is used in Anglo-Saxon<sup>2</sup> as Runar in the Icelandic, to express letters or characters. It is true that Odin used the runar for the purpose of magic, and that in Saxon run-craeftig, skilled in runæ, signifies a magician;<sup>3</sup> but the magical application of characters is no argument against their alphabetical nature, because many of the foolish charms which our ancestors and other nations have respected, have consisted, not merely of alphabetical characters, but even of words.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>1</sup> I would not attribute to the Runic letters an extravagant antiquity, but the inscriptions on rocks, etc., copied by Wormius, in his Litteraturæ Runicæ, and by Stephanus, in his notes on Saxo, proved that the Northerns used them before they received Christianity.

2d. The passage of Venantius Fortunatus, written in the middle of the sixth century, attests that the Runic was used for the purpose of writing in his time. He says :

The barbarous Runæ is painted on ashen tablets,
And what the papyrus says, a smooth rod effects.

Now as the Anglo-Saxons were not inferior in civilization to any of the barbarous nations of the North, it cannot be easily supposed that they were ignorant of Runic characters,<sup>5</sup> if their neighbors used them.

<sup>2</sup> So Cedmon uses the word, run bith gerecenod, p. 73; hwaet seo run bude, p. 86; that he to him the letters should read and explain, hwaet seo run bude, p. 99; he had before said, in his account of Daniel and Belshazzar, that the angel of the Lord wrat tha in wage worda gerynu baswe bocstafas, p. 90.

<sup>3</sup> Thus Cedmon says, the run-craeftige men could not read the handwriting till Daniel came, p. 90.

<sup>4</sup> One passage in a Saxon MS. confirms this idea: "Then asked the ealdorman the heft-ling, whether through dry-craeft, or through ryn-stafas, he had broken his bonds; and he answered that he knew nothing of this craft." Vesp. D. 14, p. 132. Now ryn-stafas means literally ryn letters. We may remark that the Welsh word for Alphabet is coel bren, which literally means the tree or wood of Omen; and see the Saxon description of the northern Runæ, in Hickes's Gram. Ang. Sax., p. 135.

<sup>5</sup> There are various alphabets of the Runæ, but their differences are not very great. I consider those characters to be most interesting which have been taken from the ancient inscriptions remaining in

3d. Though it cannot be doubted that the letters of our Saxon MSS., written after their conversion, are of Roman origin, except only two, the th, þ, and the p, the thorn and the wen, yet these two characters are all allowed by the best critics to be of Runic parentage; and if this be true, it will show that the Anglo-Saxons were acquainted with Runic as well as with Roman characters when they commenced the handwriting that prevails in their MSS.

4th. If the Saxons had derived the use of letters from the Roman ecclesiastics, it is probable that they would have taken from the Latin language the words they used to express them. Other nations so indebted, have done this. To instance from the Erse language:

|------------------------------------------|--------------------|------------|
| For book, they have leabhar, from liber. |                    |            |
| letter                                   | liter <sup>o</sup> | litera.    |
| to write                                 | { scriobham        | scribere.  |
|                                          | { grafam           | γραφω.     |
| writing                                  | scriobhadh         | scriptura. |
| to read                                  | { leagham }        | legere.    |
|                                          | { leabham }        |            |

But nations who had known letters before they became acquainted with Roman literature, would have indigenous terms to express them.

The Saxons have such terms. The most common word by which the Anglo-Saxons denoted alphabetical letters was staef; plural stafas,—Elfric, in his Saxon Grammar, so uses it. The copy of the Saxon coronation oath begins with, ‘ This writing is written, staef be staefe (letter by letter) from that writing which Dunstan, archbishop, gave the North. Wormius gives these, Lit. Run., p. 58. Hickes, in his Gram. Anglo-Isl., c. 1, gives several Runic alphabets.

to our lord at Kingston.' In the same sense the word is used in Alfred's translation of Bede, and in the Saxon Gospels. It is curious to find the same word so applied in the Runic mythology. In the Vafthrudis-mal, one of the odes of the ancient Edda of Semund, it occurs in the speech of Odin, who says, 'forum stavfom,' in the ancient letters.<sup>7</sup>

The numerous compound words derived from staef, a letter, show it to have been a radical term in the language, and of general application.

The same word was also used like the Latin littera, to signify an epistle.<sup>8</sup>

The art of using letters, or writing, is also expressed in Saxon by a verb not of Roman origin. The Saxon term for the verb to write, is not like the Erse expression, <sup>7</sup> Edda Semund, p. 3. In the Icelandic Gospels, for Latin and Hebrew letters we have Latiniskum and Ebreskum bokstefum. Luke xxiii. 38. The Franco-theotisc, for letters, has a similar compound word, bok-staven.

<sup>8</sup> When a letter or authoritative document is mentioned in Saxon, the expressions applied to it are not borrowed from the Latin, as scriptum, mandatum, epistola, and such like; but it is said, "Honorius sent the Scot a ge-writ," Sax. Ch. 39; desired the Pope with his ge-writ to confirm it, ib. 38. So Alfred, translating Bede, says, "The Pope sent to Augustin pallium and ge-writ;" here borrowing from the Latin the pallium, a thing known to them from the Romans, but using a native Saxon term to express the word epistle.

from the Latin scribere, but is 'awritan,' or 'gewritan.' This verb is formed from a similar noun of the same meaning as staef. The noun is preserved in the Maeso-Gothic, where writs signifies 'a letter.'

In like manner the Saxons did not derive their word for book from the Latin liber; they expressed it by their own term, 'boc,' as the Northerns called it 'bog.'

I do not mean to assert indiscriminately, that whenever a word indigenous in a language is used to express writing, it is therefore to be inferred that the people using that language have also letters; because it may so happen that the word may not have been an indigenous term for letters, but for something else; and may have been applied to express letters only analogically or metaphorically. To give an instance: the Indians of New England expressed letters, or writing, by the terms wussukwhonk, or wussukwheg. But the Indians had no letters nor writing among them: whence then had they these words? The answer is, that they were in the habit of painting their faces and their garments, and when we made them acquainted with writing, they applied to it their word for painting.<sup>9</sup> But though they could figuratively apply their term for painting to express writing, they had nothing to signify a book, and therefore it was necessary to ingraft our English word 'book' into their language for that purpose.

On the whole, I am induced to believe that the Anglo-Saxons were not unacquainted with alphabetical characters when they came into England. However this may be, it is certain that if they had ancient letters, they ceased to use them after their conversion. It was the invariable policy of the Roman ecclesiastics to discourage the use of the Runic characters, because they were of pagan origin, and had been much connected with idolatrous superstitions.<sup>10</sup> Hence as soon as the Christian clergy acquired influence in the Saxon octarchy, all that appeared in their literature was in the character which they had formed from the Romans.

We know nothing of the compositions of the Anglo-Saxons in their pagan state. Tacitus mentions generally of the Germans that they had ancient songs, and therefore we may believe that the Anglo-Saxons were not without them. Indeed, Dunstan is said to have learned the vain songs of his countrymen in their pagan state ; and we may suppose that if such compositions had not been in existence at that period, Edgar would not have forbidden men, on festivals, to sing heathen songs. But none of these had survived to us. If they were ever committed to writing it was on wood or stones ; indeed, their word for book, boc, expresses a beech tree, and seems to allude to the matter of which their earliest books were made.<sup>11</sup> The poets of barbarous ages usually confide the little effusions of their genius to the care of tradition. They are seldom preserved in writing till literature becomes a serious study ; and therefore we may easily believe, that if the Anglo-Saxons had alphabetical characters, they were much more used for divinations, charms, and funeral inscriptions than for literary compositions.”—Sharon Turner,—Hist. of the Anglo-Saxons, Vol. I., B. II., App., Chap. IV.

<sup>10</sup> The Swedes were persuaded by the Pope, in 1001, to lay aside the Runic letters, and to adopt the Roman in their stead. They were gradually abolished in Denmark, and afterwards in Iceland.

<sup>11</sup> Wormius infers, that pieces of wood cut from the beech tree were the ancient northern books, Lit. Run. p. 6. Saxo-Grammaticus mentions, that Fengo's Ambassadors took with them litteras ligno insculptas, "because," adds Saxo, "that was formerly a celebrated kind of material to write upon," lib. iii. p. 52. Besides the passage formerly cited from Fortunatus, we may notice another, in which he speaks of the bark as used to contain characters. See Worm., p. 9, who says, that no wood more abounds in Denmark than the beech, nor is any more adapted to receive impressions, ib. p. 7. In Welsh, gwydd, a tree, or wood, is used to denote a book. So Gwilym Tew talks of reading the gwydd. Owen's Dict. voc. Gwydd.

APPENDIX B.

“ON THE COPIOUSNESS OF THE ANGLO-SAXON LANGUAGE.”

---

“THIS language has been thought to be a very rude and barren tongue, incapable of expressing anything but the most simple and barbarous ideas. The truth, however, is, that it is a very copious language, and is capable of expressing any subject of human thought. In the technical terms of those arts and sciences which have been discovered, or much improved, since the Norman Conquest, it must of course be deficient. But books of history, belles-lettres, and poetry, may be now written in it, with considerable precision and correctness, and even with much discrimination, and some elegance of expression.

The Saxon abounds with synonymes. I will give a few instances of those which my memory can supply.”

Our author here introduces a number of words as synonymes, but which rather express the same objects under different relations.

APPENDIX B.

“They had a great number of words for a ship, and to express the Supreme, they used more words and phrases than I can recollect to have seen in any other language.

Indeed, the copiousness of their language was receiving perpetual additions from the lays of their poets. I have already mentioned that the great features of their poetry were metaphor and periphrasis. On these they prided themselves. To be fluent in these was the great object of their emulation, and the great test of their merit. Hence, Cedmon, in his account of the deluge, uses near thirty synonymous words and phrases to express the ark. They could not attain this desired end without making new words and phrases by new compounds, and most of these became naturalized in the language. The same zeal for novelty of expression led them to borrow words from every other language which came within their reach.”

* * * * *

“But the great proof of the copiousness and power of the Anglo-Saxon language may be had from considering our own English, which is principally Saxon. It may be interesting to show this by taking some lines of our principal authors, and marking in Italics the Saxon words they contain.”

SHAKSPEARE.

*To be or not to be, that is the question ;
Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer
The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune,
Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them ? To die, to sleep ;
No more ! and by a sleep to say we end
The heart-ach, and the thousand natural shocks
The flesh is heir to ! 'twere a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To die, to sleep ;
To sleep ? perchance to dream !*

MILTON.

*With thee conversing I forget all time,
All seasons, and their change ; all please alike.
Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
With charm of earliest birds ; pleasant the sun
When first on this delightful land he spreads
His orient beams on herb, tree, fruit and flower, Glistening with dew ; fragrant the fertile earth
After soft showers ; and sweet the coming on
Of grateful evening mild ; then silent night
With this her solemn bird, and this fair moon,
And these the gems of heaven, her starry train.*

COWLEY.

*Mark that swift arrow ; how it cuts the air !
How it outruns the following eye !
Use all persuasions now and try
If thou canst call it back, or stay it there.
That way it went ; but thou shalt find
No track is left behind.
Fool ! 'tis thy life, and the fond archer thou.
Of all the time thou'st shot away
I'll bid thee fetch but yesterday,
And it shall be too hard a task to do.*

TRANSLATORS OF THE BIBLE.

And they made ready the present against Joseph came at noon : for they heard that they should eat bread there. And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present which was in their hand into the house, and bowed themselves to him to the earth. And he asked them of their welfare, and said, Is your father well, the old man of whom ye spake ? Is he yet alive ? And they answered, thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive. And they bowed down their heads, and made obeisance. And he lifted up his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, his mother's son, and said, Is this your younger brother, of whom ye spake unto me ? And he said, God be gracious unto thee, my son. Gen. xliii. 25—29.

THOMSON.

*These as they change, Almighty Father, these Are but the varied God. The rolling year
Is full of thee. Full in the pleasing spring
Thy beauty walks, thy tenderness and love.
Wide flush the fields; the soft'ning air is balm;
Echo the mountains round; the forest smiles;
And every sense and every heart is joy.
Then comes thy glory in the summer months,
With light and heat refulgent. Then thy sun
Shoots full perfection through the swelling year.*

ADDISON.

I was yesterday, about sunset, walking in the open fields, till the night insensibly fell upon me. I at first amused myself with all the richness and variety of colors which appeared in the western parts of heaven. In proportion as they faded away and went out, several stars and planets appeared, one after another, till the whole firmament was in a glow. The blueness of the æther was exceedingly heightened and enlivened by the season of the year.

SPENSER.

*Hard is the doubt, and difficult to deem,
When all three kinds of love together meet,
And do dispart the heart with power extreme,
Whether shall weigh the balance down; to weat
The dear affection unto kindred sweet,
Or raging fire of love to woman kind,
Or zeal of friends combined with virtues meet:
But of them all the band of virtuous mind
Me seems the gentle heart should most assured bend.*

LOCKE.

Every man, being conscious to himself, that he thinks, and that, which his mind is applied about whilst thinking, being the ideas that are there ; it is past doubt, that men have in their minds several ideas. Such are those expressed by the words, whiteness, hardness, sweetness, thinking, motion, man, elephant, army, drunkenness, and others. It is in the first place, then, to be inquired, How he comes by them ? I know it is a received doctrine that men have native ideas, and original characters stamped upon their minds in their very first being. Locke's Essay, Book II, Ch. I.

POPE.

*How happy is the blameless vestal's lot !
The world forgetting, by the world forgot ;
Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind !
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd ;
Labor and rest that equal periods keep ;
Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep ;
Desires composed, affections ever even ;
Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to heaven,
Grace shines around her with serenest beams,
And whispering angels prompt her golden dreams.
For her th' unfading rose of Eden blooms,
And wings of seraphs shed divine perfumes.*

YOUNG.

*Let Indians, and the gay, like Indians, fond Of feather'd fopperies, the sun adore ;
Darkness has more divinity for me ;
It strikes thought inward, it drives back the soul
To settle on herself, our point supreme.
There lies our theatre : there sits our judge.
Darkness the curtain drops o'er life's dull scene ;
'Tis the kind hand of Providence stretch'd out
'Twixt man and vanity ; 'tis reason's reign,
And virtue's too ; these tutelary shades
Are man's asylum from the tainted throng.
Night is the good man's friend and guardian too.
It no less rescues virtue, than inspires.*

SWIFT.

Wisdom is a fox, who, after long hunting, will at last cost you the pains to dig out. 'Tis a cheese, which by how much the richer has the thicker, the hemelier, and the coarser coat; and whereof, to a judicious palate, the maggots are the best. 'Tis a sack posset, wherein the deeper you go, you will find it the sweeter. But then, lastly, 'tis a nut, which, unless you choose with judgment, may cost you a tooth, and pay you with nothing but a worm.

ROBERTSON.

This great emperor, in the plenitude of his power, and in possession of all the honors which can flatter the heart of man, took the extraordinary resolution to resign his kingdom; and to withdraw entirely from any concern in business, or the affairs of this world, in order that he might spend the remainder of his days in retirement and solitude. Dioclesian is, perhaps, the only prince capable of holding the reins of government, who ever resigned them from deliberate choice, and who continued during many years to enjoy the tranquillity of retirement, without fetching one penitent sigh, or casting back one look of desire towards the power or dignity which he had abandoned.—Charles V.

HUME.

The beauties of her person, and graces of her air, combined to make her the most amiable of women; and the charms of her address and conversation aided the impression which her lovely figure made on the heart of all beholders. Ambitious and active in her temper, yet inclined to cheerfulness and society; of a lofty spirit, constant and even vehemence in her purpose, yet politic, gentle, and affable in her demeanor, she seemed to partake only so much of the male virtues as to render her estimable without relinquishing those soft graces which compose the proper ornament of her sex.

GIBBON.

In the second century of the Christian era the empire of Rome comprehended the fairest part of the earth, and the most civilized portion of mankind. The frontiers of that extensive monarchy were guarded by ancient renown and disciplined valor. The gentle but powerful influence of laws and manners had gradually cemented the union of the provinces. Their peaceful inhabitants enjoyed and abused the advantages of wealth and luxury. The image of a free constitution was preserved with decent reverence.

JOHNSON.

Of genius, that power, which constitutes a poet; that quality, without which judgment is cold and knowledge is inert; that energy which collects, combines, amplifies, and animates, the superiority must, with some hesitation, be allowed to Dryden. It is not to be inferred that of this poetical vigor Pope had only a little, because Dryden had more; for every other writer since Milton must give place to Pope; and even of Dryden it must be said, that if he has brighter paragraphs, he has not better poems.

“From the preceding instances we may form an idea of the power of the Saxon language, but by no means a just idea; for we must not conclude that the words which are not Saxon could not be supplied by Saxon words. On the contrary, Saxon terms might be substituted for all the words not marked as Saxon.

To impress this sufficiently on the mind of the reader, it will be necessary to show how much of our ancient language we have laid aside, and have suffered to become obsolete; because all our writers, from Chaucer to our own times, have used words of foreign origin rather than our own. In three pages of Alfred's Orosius, I found 78 words which have become obsolete, out of 548, or about one-seventh. In three pages of his Boetius I found 143 obsolete, out of 666, or about one-fifth. In three pages of his Bede, I found 230 obsolete out of 969, or about one-fifth. The difference in the proportion between these and the Orosius proceeds from the latter containing many historical names. Perhaps we shall be near the truth if we say, as a general principle, that one-fifth of the Anglo-Saxon language has ceased to be used in modern English. This loss must of course be taken into account when we estimate the copiousness of our ancient language, by considering how much of it our English authors exhibit.”—Sharon Turner,—Hist. of the Anglo-Saxons, Vol. I., App. I., Chap. III.

APPENDIX C.

“THE Greeks and Romans, counting only by tens, composed their numbers from ten to twenty, with δεκα, decem, ten; ένδεκα, undecim, eleven; δωδεκα, duodecim, twelve. The German tribes form the same numerals in a similar manner, except eleven and twelve, which were composed with Ger. lif; A.-S. laefan, lif, lef, l’f, in other dialects. But as this anomaly entered our numeral system in a period anterior to the history of our tongues, and is common to all the Germanic languages, the analogy between the kindred dialects is not disturbed by these irregularities, but rather advanced.

“18. The cause of this disturbance lies in the old practice of using both ten and twelve as fundamental numbers.

“The advance was by ten, thus thrittig, Country Friesic tritich; feowertig, Ab. 2, &c.; but on arriving at sixty the series was finished, and another begun, denoted by prefixing hund. This second series proceeded to one hundred and twenty, thus: hundnigontig, ninety; hundteontig, a hundred; hundenlufontig, a hundred and ten; hundtwelftig, a hundred and twenty: here the second series concluded. It thus appears that the Anglo-Saxons did not know our hundred=100, as the chief division of numbers; and, though they counted from ten to ten, they, at the same time, chose the number twelve as the basis of the chief divisions. As we say,  $5 \times 10 = 50$ ;  $10 \times 10 = 100$ ; they multiplied 5 and 10 by 12, and produced 60 and 120. When the Scandinavians adopted a hundred as a chief division— $100 = 10 \times 10$ —they still retained one hundred and twenty; and calling both these numbers hundred, they distinguished them by the epithets little or ten hundred, lill-hundrad or hundrad tiraed, and great or the twelve number hundred, stor-hundrade, or hundrad tólfraed. The Danes count to forty by tens, thus: tredive, thirty; fyr-rytyve, forty; and then commence by twenties, thus: halvtrediesindstyve, literally in A.-S. þridda healf sithon twentig\*—two twenties—and the third twenty half, i. e. fifty. The Icelanders call 2500 half þriddie thousand,—Dut. derdehalfduizend, i. e. two thousand, and the third thousand half; firesindtyve—four-times twenty—eighty, and so on to a hundred. The Francs being a mixture of kindred nations from the middle of Germany, when they entered Gallia, partly adopted the Anglo-Saxon mode of numeration, and partly that of the Danes, and they afterwards translated verbally their vernacular names of the numerals by Latin words. From twenty to fifty it proceeds in the usual manner, vingt, trente, quarante, cinquante, soixante; but having arrived at seventy, the same place where the Anglo-Saxons commenced with hund, hundseofontig, it uses soixante dix, quatre vingt, just as the Danes express eighty by firesindstyve, four times twenty. As it appears that the old Germans had two fundamental numbers, ten and twelve, it follows that eleven and twelve are the last two numerals of the twelve series, and the first two in the ten series; hence perhaps came the use of the termination lif or lef in eleven and twelve.”—BOSWORTH, Origin and Connexion of the Germanic Tongues.

* The ellipsis of the two twenties is supplied in the expression twa geare and þriddie healf, two years and half the third year, literally in Frs. c. twa jier in t' tredde heal, but custom contracts it to tredde heal jier. Hickes compares this ellipsis with the Scotch expression. half ten, which is also the Dut. half tien, but in this he is not accurate. The country Friesians not having this ellipsis, prove that it must be supplied in another way. They say, healwei tsjienen, half way of the present hour to ten o'clock. Dr. Dorow has also fallen into the same mistake, p. 127, Denkmäler, I., 2 and 3.

APPENDIX D.

ON THE STRUCTURE AND MECHANISM OF THE ANGLO-SAXON LANGUAGE.

“To explain the history of any language is a task peculiarly difficult at this period of the world, in which we are so very remote from the era of its original construction.

We have, as yet, witnessed no people in the act of forming their language, and cannot, therefore, from experience, demonstrate the simple elements from which a language begins, nor the additional organization which it gradually receives. The languages of highly civilized people, which are those that we are most conversant with, are in a state very unlike their ancient tongues. Many words have been added to them from other languages; many have deviated into meanings very different from their primitive significations; many have been so altered by the change of pronunciation and orthography, as scarcely to bear any resemblance to their ancient forms. The abbreviations of language, which have been usually called its articles, pronouns, conjunctions, prepositions and interjections; the inflections of its verbs, the declensions of its nouns, and the very form of its syntax, have also undergone so many alterations from the caprice of human usage, that it is impossible to discern anything of the mechanism of a language, but by ascending from its present state to its more ancient form.

The Anglo-Saxon is one of those ancient languages to which we may successfully refer, in our inquiries how language has been constructed.

APPENDIX D.

As we have not had the experience of any people forming a language, we cannot attain to a knowledge of its mechanism in any other way than by analysing it ; by arranging its words into their classes, and by tracing these to their elementary sources. We shall perhaps be unable to discover the original words with which the language began, but we may hope to trace the progress of its formation, and some of the principles on which that progress has been made. In this inquiry I shall follow the steps of the author of the Diversions of Purley, and build upon his foundation, because I think that his book has presented to us the key to that mechanism which we have so long admired, so fruitlessly examined, and so little understood.

Words have been divided into nine classes : the article, the substantive or noun, the pronoun, the adjective, the verb, the adverb, the preposition, the conjunction, and the interjection.

Under these classes all the Saxon words may be arranged, although not with that scientific precision with which the classifications of natural history have been made. Mr. Tooke has asserted, that in all languages there are only two sorts of words necessary for the communication of our thoughts, and therefore only two parts of speech, the noun and the verb, and that the others are the abbreviations of these.

But if the noun and the verb be only used, they will serve not so much to impart our meaning, as to indicate it. These will suffice to express simple substances or facts, and simple motions of nature or man ; but will do by themselves little else. All the connexions, references, distinctions, limitations, applications, contrasts, relations, and refinements of thought and feeling—and therefore most of what a cultivated people wish to express by language, cannot be conveyed without the other essential abbreviations—and therefore all nations have been compelled, as occasions occurred, as wants increased, and as thought evolved, to invent or adopt them, till all that were necessary became naturalized in the language.

That nouns and verbs are the most essential and primitive words of language, and that all others have been formed from them, are universal facts, which after reading the Diversions of Purley, and tracing in other languages the application of the principles there maintained, no enlightened philologist will now deny. But though this is true as to the origin of these parts of speech, it may be questioned whether the names established by conventional use may not be still properly retained, because the words now classed as conjunctions, prepositions, etc., though originally verbs, are not verbs at present, but have been long separated from their verbal parents, and have become distinct parts of our grammatical syntax.

That the conjunctions, the prepositions, the adverbs, and the interjections of our language, have been made from our verbs and nouns, Mr. Tooke has satisfactorily shown; and with equal truth he has affirmed, that articles and pronouns have proceeded from the same source. I have pursued his inquiries through the Saxon and other languages, and am satisfied that the same may be affirmed of adjectives. Nouns and verbs are the parents of all the rest of language; and it can be proved in the Anglo-Saxon, as in other tongues, that of these the nouns are the ancient and primitive stock from which all other words have branched and vegetated."

* * * * *

"The Anglo-Saxon VERBS have essentially contributed to form those parts of speech which Mr. Tooke has denominated the abbreviations of language. The verbs, however, are not themselves the primitive words of our language. They are all in a state of composition. They are like the secondary mountains of the earth—they have been formed posterior to the ancient bulwarks of human speech, which are the nouns—I mean of course those nouns which are in their elementary state.

In some languages, as in the Hebrew, the verbs are very often the nouns applied unaltered to a verbal signification. We have examples of this sort of verbs in our English words, love, hate, fear, hope, dream, sleep, etc. These words are nouns, and are also used as verbs. Of verbs thus made by the simple application of nouns in a verbal form, the Anglo-Saxon gives few examples.

Almost all its other verbs are nouns with a final syllable added, and this final syllable is a word expressive of motion, or action, or possession.

To show this fact, we will take some of the Anglo-Saxon verbs :

If we go through all the alphabet, we shall find that most of the verbs are composed of a noun, and the syllables an, ian, or gan. Of these additional syllables, gan is the verb of motion, to go, or the verb agan to possess; and an seems sometimes the abbreviation of anan to give, and sometimes of the verbs gan and agan. Thus deagan, to tinge, appears to me deag-an, to give a color; daelan, to divide, dael-an, to give a part; cossan, to kiss, cos-an, to give a kiss; cursian, to curse, cursan, to give a curse; while we may presume that carian, to be anxious, is car-agan, to have care; blostmian, to blossom, is blostm-agan, to have a flower; byan, to inhabit, is by-agan, to have a habitation. We may also say that cidan, to quarrel, is the abbreviation of cid-gan, to go to quarrel; baethian, to wash, is baeth-gan, to go to a bath; biddan, to pray, is bidde-gan, to go to pray. The Gothic to pray is bidgan.

That the words gan, or agan, have been abbreviated or softened into an, or ian, can be proved from several verbs. Thus fylgan, or filigian, to follow, is also filian. Thus fleogan, to fly, becomes fleon and flion. So forhtigan, to be afraid, has become also forhtian. So fundigan has become fundian; gethyldgian, gethyldian; fengan, foan, and fon; and teogan, teon. The examples of this change are innumerable.

This abbreviation is also proved by many of the participles of the abbreviated verbs ending in gend, thus showing the original infinitive to have been gen; as frefrian, to comfort, has its participle frefergend; fremian, to profit, freomigend; fulian, has fuligend; gaemnian, gaemnigend, etc.

Many verbs are composed of the terminations above mentioned, and of words which exist in the Anglo-Saxon, not as nouns, but as adjectives, and of some words which are not to be met with in the Anglo-Saxon, either as nouns or adjectives. But so true is the principle, that nouns were the primitive words of these verbs, and that verbs are but the nouns with the additional final syllables, that we shall very frequently find the noun we search for existing in the state of a noun in some of those languages which have a close affinity with the Anglo-Saxon. This language meets our eye in a very advanced state, and therefore, when we decompose it, we cannot expect to meet in itself all its elements. Many of its elements had dropped out of its vocabulary at that period wherein we find it, just as in modern English we have dropped a great number of words of our Anglo-Saxon ancestors. In this treatise, which the necessary limits of my publication compel me to make very concise, I can only be expected to give a few instances.

Beran, is to bring forth, or produce; there is no primitive noun answering to this verb in the Anglo-Saxon, but there is in the Franco-theotisc, where we find bar is fruit, or whatever the earth produces ; ber-an is therefore to give fruit or to produce. So maersian, to celebrate, is from segan, to speak, and some noun from which the adjective maera, illustrious, had been formed. The noun is not in the Saxon, but it is in the Franco-theotisc, where maera is fame, or rumor ; therefore, maersian, to celebrate a person, is mera-segan, to speak his fame. I have observed many examples of this sort.

In searching for the original nouns from which verbs have been formed, we must always consider if the verb we are inquiring about be a primitive verb or a secondary verb, containing either of the prefixes a, be, ge, for, in, on, to, with, etc., etc. In these cases we must strip the verb of its prefix, and examine its derivation under its earlier form. The verbs with a prefix are obviously of later origin than the verbs to which the prefix has not been applied.

Sometimes the verb consists of two verbs put together, as gan-gan, to go ; so for-letan, to dismiss or leave, is composed of two verbs, faran, to go, laetan, to let or suffer, and is literally to let go.

The Anglo-Saxon NOUNS are not all of the same antiquity ; some are the primitive words of the language from which every other has branched, but some are of later date."

* * * * *

"The primitive nouns expressing sensible objects, having been formed, they were multiplied by combinations with each other. They were then applied to express ideas more abstracted. By adding to them a few expressive syllables, the numerous classes of verbs and adjectives arose ; and from these again other nouns and adjectives were formed. The nouns and verbs were then abbreviated and adapted into conjunctions, prepositions, adverbs, and interjections. The pronouns were soon made from a sense of their convenience; and out of them came the articles. To illustrate these principles, from the various languages which I have examined, would expand these few pages into a volume, and would be therefore improper; but I can recommend the subject to the attention of the philological student, with every assurance of a successful research.

The multiplication of language by the metaphorical application of nouns to express other nouns, or to signify adjectives, may be observed in all languages. Thus, beorht, light, was applied to express bright, shining, and illustrious. So deop, the sea, was applied to express depth.

As a specimen how the Anglo-Saxon language has been formed from the multiplication of simple words, I will show the long train of words which have been formed from a few primitive words. I select four of the words applicable to the mind. The numerous terms formed from them will illustrate the preceding observations on the mechanism of the language.

ANCIENT NOUN:

Hyge or hige mind or thought.

Secondary meaning: cure, diligence, study.

the Anglo-Saxon language has been formed; and they also indicate that it had become very far removed from a rude state of speech. These derivative compounds imply much cultivation and exercise, and a considerable portion of mental discrimination. It is, indeed, in such an advanced state, that novels, moral essays, dramas, and the poetry of nature and feeling might be written in pure Anglo-Saxon, without any perceptible deficiency of appropriate terms."—SHARON TURNER,—Hist. of the Anglo-Saxons, Vol. II., App. I., Chap. 1.

We have given these extracts without endorsing, as will have been perceived to a certain extent, all the opinions advanced by the writer, differing, as we do in our philological principles, from the Author of the Diversions of Purley, and others of the late English School. Our views, so far as called forth by the language with which we have been occupied, will appear more fully, and at the same time be exemplified, in another volume now in press, and also, at some future day, in a less compendious Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon, our expressive and noble ancestral tongue

Of late firm of WILEY & PUTNAM.

New Works in Press,
Or recently published, by
GEORGE P. PUTNAM,
155 Broadway, New York.

G. P. PUTNAM has the pleasure of announcing that, agreeably to his contract with the distinguished author, he has now in the course of publication

A new, uniform, and complete edition

OF THE

Works of Washington Irving,

Revised and enlarged by the Author,

In Twelve Elegant Duodecimo Volumes,

Beautifully printed with new type, and on superior paper, made expressly for the purpose.

The first volume of the Series will be

The Sketch-Book,

complete in one volume,

which will be ready on the first day of September.

The Illustrated Sketch-Book.

In October will be published,

The Sketch-Book.

BY WASHINGTON IRVING.

One volume, square octavo.

Illustrated with a series of highly-finished Engravings on wood, from Designs by Darley and others, engraved in the best style by Childs, Herrick, &c. This edition will be printed on paper of the finest quality, similar in size and style to the new edition of "Halleck's Poems." It is intended that the illustrations shall be superior to any engravings on wood yet produced in this country, and that the mechanical execution of the volume, altogether, shall be worthy of the author's reputation. It will form an elegant and appropriate gift-book for all seasons.

The Illustrated Knickerbocker,

With a series of Original Designs, in one vol., octavo, is also in preparation.

Mr. Putnam has also the honor to announce that he will publish at intervals (in connexion, and uniform with the other collected writings),

Mr. Irving's New Works,

now nearly ready for the press: including

The Life of Mohammed,

The Life of Washington,

New volumes of Miscellanies, Biographies, &c.

*.* This being the first in form and complete edition of Mr. Irving's works, either in this country or in Europe, the publisher confidently believes that the undertaking will meet with a prompt and cordial response. To say this, is perhaps superfluous and impertinent; for it is a truism that no American book-case (not to say library) can be well filled without the works of Washington Irving; while the English language itself comprises no purer models of composition.

G. P. Putnam has also made arrangements for the early commencement of new works or new editions of the works of

Miss C. M. Sedgewick,
Charles Fenno Hoffman,
George H. Calvert,
J. Bayard Taylor,
S. Wells Williams,
A. J. Downing,
Prof A. Gray,
Mrs E. Oakes Smith,
Mrs. C. M. Kirkland,

Mary Howitt,
W. M. Thackeray,
Thos. Hood,
Leigh Hunt,
Thomas Carlyle,
R. Monckton Milnes,
Mrs. Jameson,
Charles Lamb,
Elliot Warburton.

The following new works are now ready, or will be published this season:

I.

Sophisms of the Protective Policy.

Translated from the French of F. Bastiat. With an introduction by Francis Lieber, LL.D. Professor in South Carolina College, Editor of the Encyclopædia Americana, &c. 12mo.

II.

Grecian and Roman Mythology:

With original illustrations. Adapted for the use of Universities and High Schools, and for popular reading. By M. A. Dwight. With an introduction by Tayler Lewis, Professor of Greek, University of New York. 12mo. (On 1st September)

Also a fine edition in octavo, with illustrations.

*.* This work has been prepared with great care, illustrated with 20 effective outline drawings, and is designed to treat the subject in an original, comprehensive, and unexceptionable manner, so as to fill the place as a text book which is yet unsupplied; while it will also be an attractive and readable table book for general use. It will be at once introduced as a text book in the University of New York and other colleges and schools.

III.

Eureka: a Prose Poem.

Or the Physical and Metaphysical Universe.

By Edgar A. Poe, Esq. Handsomely printed. 12mo. Cloth.

IV.

The Book of Dainty Devices.

* * * This new and unique volume, superbly illuminated by M. Pleson, and comprising original articles by distinguished writers, will be the most elegant and recherche book of the kind ever produced in this country. It will be ready in October.

A new and superior edition of the PEARLS OF AMERICAN POETRY will also be published this season.

V.

Oriental Life Illustrated.

Being a new edition of Eothen, or Traces of Travel in the East. With fine illustrations on Steel.

Dr. Klipstein's Anglo-Saxon Course of Study.

In uniform 12mo. volumes.

I.

A Grammar of the Anglo-Saxon Language. By Louis F. Klipstein, AA. LL.M. and PH.D., of the University of Gessen.

* * * This work recommends itself particularly to the attention of every American student who "glories in his Anglo-Saxon descent" or Teutonic lineage, as well as of all who desire an acquaintance with a language which lies as the foundation of the English, and throws a light upon its elements and structure, derivable from no other source. Of the importance and interesting nature of the study there can be no doubt, and we agree with those who think that the time is coming when it will be considered "utterly disgraceful for any well bred Englishman or American" to have neglected it. With regard to the merits of Dr. Klipstein's Grammar, we will only say, that it has been already adopted as a text-book in some of the leading Institutions of our country.

[The following are also in press.]

II.

Analecta Anglo Saxonica, with an Introductory Ethnographical Essay, Copious Notes, Critical and Explanatory, and a Glossary in which are shown the Indo-Germanic and other Affinities of the Language. By the same.

In this work appear the fruits of considerable research, and, we may add, learning. The Ethnology of Europe is succinctly, but clearly illustrated, the Anglo-Saxon language completely analysed, revealing the utmost harmony of combination from its elements, its forms and roots compared with those in kindred dialects and cognate tongues, its position in the Teutonic family and Indo-Germanic range established, and the genuine relation of the English to its great parent properly set forth. To those who are fond of the comparative study of language, the Glossary will prove an invaluable aid, apart from its particular object.

III.

Natale Sancti Gregorii Papæ.—Ælfric's Homily on the Birth-day of St. Gregory, and Colateral Extracts from King Alfred's version of Bede's Ecclesiastical History and the Saxon Chronicle, with a full rendering into English, Notes Critical and Explanatory, and an Index of Words. By the same.

IV.

Extracts from the Anglo-Saxon Gospels, a Portion of the Anglo-Saxon Paraphrase of the Book of Psalm, and other Selections of a Sacred Order in the same Language, with a Translation into English, and Notes Critical and Explanatory. By the same.

These two works are prepared in such a way as in themselves, with the aid of the Grammar to afford every facility to the Anglo-Saxon Student. Ælfric's Homily is remarkable for beauty of composition, and interesting as setting forth Augustine's Mission to the "Land of the Angles."

V.

Tha Hælgan Godspel on Englisc—the Anglo-Saxon Version of the Holy Gospels. Edited by Benjamin Thorpe, F.S.A. Reprinted by the same. Now ready.

This, the earliest "English" version of the Four Gospels, will be found interesting to the antiquarian and theologian, as well as serviceable to the student in his investigations of the language. The Text, besides the usual but unbroken division, appears, with the Rubrics, as read in the early Anglican Church.

VII.

Study of Modern Languages.

Part First; French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, German, and English.

By L. F. Klipstein, A.A. LL.M. and Ph. D. One Vol. Imperial 8vo. 75 cents.

This work, which is intended equally for the simultaneous and the separate study of the languages that it sets forth, and which is adapted as well for the native of Germany, France, Italy, Spain, or Portugal, as for him to whom English is vernacular, in the acquirement of any one of the other tongues besides his own, will be found an acceptable manual not only to the tyro, but to the more advanced scholar. The reading portion of the matter is interesting, and the text in every case remarkably correct, while the Elementary Phrases, forms of Cards, Letters, Bills of Exchange, Promissory Notes, Receipts, &c., in the six languages, constitute what has long been a desideratum from the American press. For the comparative study of the Romanic tongues the work affords unusual facilities.

VIII.

Pedestrian Tour in Europe.

Views a-Foot; or Europe seen with Knapsack and Staff.

By J. Bayard Taylor.

A new edition with an additional chapter, and a sketch of the author in pedestrian costume, from a drawing by T. Buchanan Read. 12mo. Cloth.

IX.

The Third Edition of

The Middle Kingdom.

A SURVEY OF THE

GEOGRAPHY, GOVERNMENT, EDUCATION, SOCIAL LIFE, ARTS, RELIGION, ETC.,

Of the Chinese Empire

AND ITS INHABITANTS.

With a New Map of the Empire, and Illustrations, principally engraved by J. W. Orr.

BY S. WELLS WILLIAMS.

Two Vols. 8vo. Half morocco, gilt tops, $3. Now ready.

"What personal observation did not supply has been industriously and ably supplied from other sources. This will probably take the place of the previous accounts of the Chinese Empire, as more full and accurate than they."—Evening Post.

"We are very greatly mistaken, or the circulation of these volumes will raise very much the inhabitants of the Middle Kingdom in the respect of our countrymen."—N. Y. Recorder.

"We do not think the man is living who is better qualified than Mr. Williams to make a book on China, and he has produced a work which will be of standard authority as reference."—N. Y. Observer.

"The work before us is full of the information required, interspersed with numerous amusing sketches of the peculiar manners of this people. No one was more qualified to write a book of this sort than the author; and all who read it will be highly interested, and will learn more of the Celestials from it, than he can anywhere else."—Christian Advocate & Journal.

X.

A New Edition of

Clarke's Shakspeare Concordance.

A Complete Concordance to Shakspeare: being a Verbal Index to ALL the PASSAGES in the Dramatic Works of the Poet. By Mrs. Cowden Clarke.

"Order gave each thing view."

One large Vol. comprising 2560 closely printed columns,—(indicating every word and passage in Shakspeare's Works). Price $6. Cloth.

"The result of sixteen years of untiring labor. The different editions of Shakspeare have been carefully collated by the compiler, and every possible means taken to insure the correctness of the work. As it now stands, a person can find a particular passage in Shakspeare by simply remembering one word of it, and is also referred to the act and scene of the play in which it occurs. As a mere dictionary of Shakspearian language and phrases, it is of great value; but it is also a dictionary of his thoughts and imaginations. It altogether supersedes the volumes of Twiss and Ayscough, and should be on every student's shelves"—Boston Courier.

* * This extraordinary work is printed in London and the price there at present is £2 5s. 0d. or about $12. A large part of the edition having been purchased for this market, it is furnished here for the very low price of $6, bound in cloth.

Also---By same Author.

The Book of Shakspeare Proverbs.

18mo. 75 cts.

Dr. Lieber's Poetical Address to the American Republic.

In a few days in a neat volume,

The West:

A Metrical Epistle.

BY FRANCIS LIEBER.

* * Dr. Lieber, the distinguished Professor of Political Economy in South Carolina College, Author of "Political Ethics," &c., has just sailed for his native country—Germany—with the view of aiding in the great cause of Constitutional and Rational Freedom. This little volume proves that he has well-studied that subject during his long residence in this his adopted country—and his able and valuable opinions on American Society and Progress, carry with them a peculiar interest at this time.

Bibliotheca Sacra and Theological Review. Conducted by

B. B. Edwards and E. A. Park, Professors at Andover, with the Special Aid of Dr. Robinson and Professor Stuart. Published quarterly in February, May, August, and November $4 per annum. Vols. 1, 2, 3, and 4, 8vo. cloth, each $4.

"This is, perhaps, the most ambitious journal in the United States. We use the word in a good sense, as meaning that there is no journal among us which seems more laudably desirous to take the lead in literary and theological science. Its handsome type and paper give it a pleasing exterior; its typographical errors, though sufficiently numerous, are so comparatively few, as to show that it has the advantage of the best American proof-reading; while for thoroughness of execution in the departments of history and criticism, it aims to be pre-eminent."—N. Y. Churchman.

George P. Putnam

(OF THE LATE FIRM OF WILEY AND PUTNAM)

Has taken the new and commodious premises,

155 BROADWAY, NEW YORK

(Next building to that of the late Firm),

And continues the business of

PUBLISHING,

AND THE

IMPORTATION OF FOREIGN BOOKS,

AS ABOVE, AND AT

PUTNAM'S AMERICAN LITERARY AGENCY, 142 Strand, London

[ESTABLISHED IN 1838].

Arrangements have been made to secure at the London Agency the services of an experienced and competent Bibliographer, so that the business of executing SPECIAL ORDERS FOR THE TRADE AND PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS may be better regulated, and all parties giving such orders, may be fully satisfied both with regard to expedition and economy.

The interests of Public Institutions, and those ordering Books in quantities will receive special attention, while it is also intended that any one ordering a single volume from Europe, may receive it promptly (if procurable), without disappointment or unnecessary expense.

Mr. PUTNAM believes that his twelve years' experience abroad in purchasing Books for the American market, will be of service to those who may favor him with orders.

* * Correspondence established with PARIS, ROME, LEIPSIC, BRUSSELS, and all the principal cities on the Continent. All American Publications on the best terms, by the quantity or singly

N. B.—CATALOGUES of extensive collections of Foreign and American Books, on all subjects, may be had on application.
